

Iraqi foreign minister in Moscow

MOSCOW (R) — Iraqi Foreign Minister Tareq Aziz arrived in Moscow Monday for talks with Soviet leaders on the Iran-Iraq war. Soviet First Deputy Foreign Minister Yuli Vorontsov greeted him at the airport. TASS news agency reported. Earlier, the Iraqi News Agency said Aziz would discuss developments at the United Nations Security Council, of which the Soviet Union is a member, in the light of Iran's failure to accept Resolution 598 ordering a Gulf war ceasefire. Baghdad has accused Moscow of trying to postpone attempts to impose sanctions against Iran to press it to accept the resolution. Meanwhile, TASS reported that a delegation from the Supreme Soviet had arrived in Iraq for a working visit. Vernon Walters, Washington's ambassador to the U.N., said Sunday the Security Council was considering a new resolution to increase pressure on Iran for a ceasefire. Asked if the Soviet Union supported a new resolution, he said: "The Soviets are agreeable to sanctions, but they want to give the secretary-general (Javier Perez de Cuellar) more time. The secretary-general says he needs more muscle behind him."

Fayez returns

AMMAN (J.T.) — Lower House of Parliament Speaker Akef Al Fayez returned to Amman Monday after leading Jordan's delegation to meetings in Tunis of the Arab Parliamentary Union (APU). The APU meeting voiced support for the Palestinian uprising and called on Arab countries to work towards a collective strategy to counter Israel.

Ramadan meets Kaufman

BAGHDAD (AP) — Gerald Kaufman, the foreign affairs spokesman for Britain's opposition Labour Party, met with a top Iraqi official Monday to discuss the Gulf war. Baghdad Radio said First Deputy Prime Minister Taha Yassin Ramadan reiterated Iraq's commitment to a peaceful settlement through implementation of U.N. Security Council Resolution 598. Kaufman arrived in Baghdad Saturday. He met with Foreign Minister Tareq Aziz Sunday.

Mubarak visit to Tunis postponed

TUNIS (R) — Egyptian President Hosni Mubarak will not visit Tunisia, which restored diplomatic relations with Cairo this month, during his current foreign tour, the Egyptian embassy said Monday. Ambassador-designate Ali Maher told Reuters that Mubarak would not stop off in Tunisia Friday after a trip to Morocco as reported last week by the semi-official Egyptian newspaper Al Ahram.

Siniora, Abu Rahme meet U.N. chief

UNITED NATIONS (R) — Two prominent Palestinians from the occupied territories, newspaper editor Hanna Siniora and lawyer Faiez Abu Rahme, conferred Monday with Secretary General Javier Perez de Cuellar. The two men were in Washington last week where they urged U.S. Secretary of State George Shultz to support establishment of a U.N. peacekeeping force to protect inhabitants of the West Bank and the Gaza Strip.

Mellor, Murphy discuss Mideast

WASHINGTON (AP) — A top British official met Monday with American officials to express support for the just-concluded U.S.-Soviet nuclear arms treaty and exchange views on the Middle East. State Minister for Foreign Affairs David Mellor met for an hour with Assistant Secretary of State Richard Murphy to discuss the latest U.S. and European efforts to revive stalled peace talks in the region. Murphy reported to Mellor on the visit to Jordan that negotiator Philip Habib made over the weekend on behalf of President Ronald Reagan, officials said. Habib returned to Washington Monday, but the White House said it did not have any progress to report on his talks with King Hussein. Mellor reported to Murphy on his recent visit to Israel and the occupied territories.

Ozal to visit Athens

DAVOS (R) — Turkish Prime Minister Turgut Ozal said Monday he planned to go to Athens later this year in the first of an exchange of visits to improve relations with Greece. Ozal and Greek Prime Minister Andreas Papandreou had a final breakfast meeting Monday after agreeing over the weekend to improve ties (See page 2).

Group threatens to kill Israeli captive

BEIRUT (R) — A pro-Iranian guerrilla group threatened Monday to kill an Israeli it holds captive in Lebanon unless Israel stopped its "iron fist" measures against Palestinians in the occupied territories. "We announce that an Israeli prisoner we hold has now entered the danger zone and might face a black destiny if the criminal Zionists do not stop their brutal measures against our Muslim people in occupied Palestine," said a statement signed by the Islamic Resistance. The hand-written statement, delivered to an international news agency in Beirut, conformed to the usual style of the group but was not accompanied by any proof of authorship. The Islamic Resistance said in February 1986 it had captured two Israeli soldiers in South Lebanon. It has since given no information on their fate. The Amal militia also captured an Israeli pilot whose fighter was downed during a raid on Palestinian positions in Sidon in October 1986. The Islamic Resistance usually claims attacks in the south of Israeli troops and their South Lebanon Army (SLA) allies (see story below). The group said the threat to kill the Israeli was "to introduce a new element in the confrontation with the enemy and to support the blessed uprising in the occupied land."

Arab views conveyed to Holy See; talks centre on Israel's arbitrary practices

King, Pope discuss Mideast situation

By a Jordan Times Staff Writer with agency dispatches

VATICAN CITY — His Majesty King Hussein Monday held talks with Pope John Paul II at the Vatican on the situation in the Israeli-occupied West Bank and Gaza and means for alleviating the plight of the Palestinians under Israeli occupation.

A statement issued by the Vatican following the talks said the Palestinian issue was a "question of international justice."

The Jordan News Agency, Petra, said the King underlined the need for intensified efforts for land for peace and safeguarding the rights of and security of all peoples in the Middle East."

Petra said the King discussed with the Pope efforts to end Israel's practices of imposing collective punishment on Arabs, evicting Arabs from their homeland and starving the Palestinian population. The King and the Pope emphasised the need for Israel to respect and abide by the principles of world peace, the agency added.

King Hussein conveyed to the Pope the Arab World's deep satisfaction and delight over the pontiff's appointment of a Palestinian Arab as patriarch of Jerusalem. Father Michel Sabah, a Palestinian born in Nazareth, was named by the Pope as Roman Catholic Patriarch of Jerusalem, last month.

Petra noted that the King's talks with the Pope came in line with a resolution adopted by the Nov. 8-11 Arab summit held in Amman which authorised His Majesty to follow up and intensify dialogue with the Vatican over the Middle East issue and convey the Arab and Islamic nation's appreciation of the Pope's noble and honourable stands with regard to Arab issues and the problem of Jerusalem.

Jordan sees new U.S. proposal falling short of peace conference

AMMAN (R) — Jordanian officials responded cautiously Monday to reports of a new U.S. Middle East peace initiative and a cabinet minister said it failed to match Arab demands.

Occupied Territories Affairs Minister Marwan Dridi said the U.S. proposal, as reported in news media, fell short of Arab demands and would continue until Palestinian demands were met.

"I have seen nothing in writing, but if we take the report seriously, it doesn't compare well with the Arab consensus," Dridi told Reuters.

Israeli sources said Sunday Washington had put new proposals for Palestinian "self-rule" to Israel and Jordan in a bid to break the deadlock in efforts to settle the Palestinian problem.

President Ronald Reagan sent veteran envoy Philip Habib to Amman Saturday with a message for His Majesty King Hussein about the occupied territories. No details on the message have emerged.

The Israeli sources said the plan involved limited "self-rule" for the West Bank and Gaza, with talks on the territories' final status to start within a year among Israel, Jordan, Egypt and Palestinian representatives.

Dridi said the Arab position calling for an international forum was expressed at the Amman summit in November. The reported U.S. idea met none of the Arab points "and doesn't seem to move in a direction closer to ours."

Information Minister Hani Al Khasawneh said Jordan welcomed "any real and serious movement aimed at solving the Palestinian problem... and any move to hold an international conference."

"That's why the King received Mr. Habib personally," he told Reuters.

The King, now in Italy at the start of a European tour, has criticised Washington's reluctance to throw its weight behind an international conference under U.N. auspices.

He told the Washington Post last week the United States was influenced by Israeli extremists, "people who cannot see beyond tomorrow or the day after tomorrow, let alone years from now."

Mubarak sends message to King

ROME (Agencies) — His Majesty King Hussein Monday received a message from Egyptian President Hosni Mubarak on the outcome of the Egyptian leader's recent talks with European and American leaders on efforts for peace in the Middle East.

The message was delivered to the King by Egyptian Foreign Minister Esmat Abdul Meguid, who flew to Rome from Paris, where he arrived Sunday accompanying Mubarak on an official visit.

These included an end to Israeli occupation and a period in which the United Nations would provide trusteeship of the West Bank, Gaza and Arab Jerusalem so that Palestinians could determine their own future and establish a Palestinian state.

The United States and Israeli rulers are mistaken and live in illusion if they think they can... curb our resistance," Abu Sherif said.

The Jordan News Agency, Petra, said the message dealt with the outcome of Mubarak's visit to the U.S. and Europe and efforts for convening an international peace conference on the Middle East.

The King, now on a visit to Italy, conferred with Abdul Meguid in a meeting attended by Royal Court Chief Marwan Al Qasem, Foreign Minister Taher Al Masri and Court Minister Adnan Abu Odeh at his residence in Rome.

Following the meeting, Abdul Meguid told reporters:

"My visit to Rome was to deliver a message from President Mubarak to His Majesty the King... which deals specifically with the peace process."

Abdul Meguid, who was returning to Paris later Monday night, declined to discuss details of the meeting or of the mission.

An Egyptian spokesman in Paris said before Abdul Meguid left for Rome that he was carrying a message from the King on the position of the United States following a meeting between Mubarak and U.S. envoy Philip Habib Sunday night.

Habib mission

In Washington, the White House said Monday it does not have any progress to report from Habib's mission.

"We don't have any breakthrough to report, but the president clearly wants to offer the services of the United States in any way possible," White House spokesman Marlin Fitzwater said.

He said Habib was looking for potential solutions and that if the United States "can be

Resistance says 15 Israelis, SLA men dead or wounded

BEIRUT (Agencies) — Resistance fighters said Monday they killed or wounded 15 Israeli soldiers and allied militiamen in a pre-dawn clash in South Lebanon.

The Islamic Resistance said in a statement its guerrillas stormed two positions manned by Israeli troops and militiamen of the Israeli-backed South Lebanon Army (SLA) near Baraachit, eight kilometers from Rashaf, Hadath and Baraachit at the edge of the "security zone."

The message was delivered to the Israeli army.

It did not report any casualties.

The Israeli financed, trained and armed SLA patrols a narrow strip of Lebanese territory along the southern border. The so-called "security zone" was established by Israel in 1985 after the withdrawal of the bulk of Israeli forces from Lebanon, ending a three-year occupation.

The SLA positions at the villages of Rashaf, Hadath and Baraachit lie at the edge of the "security zone."

The Islamic Resistance statement said its fighters launched the attack under artillery cover and later clashed with the SLA for 30 minutes.

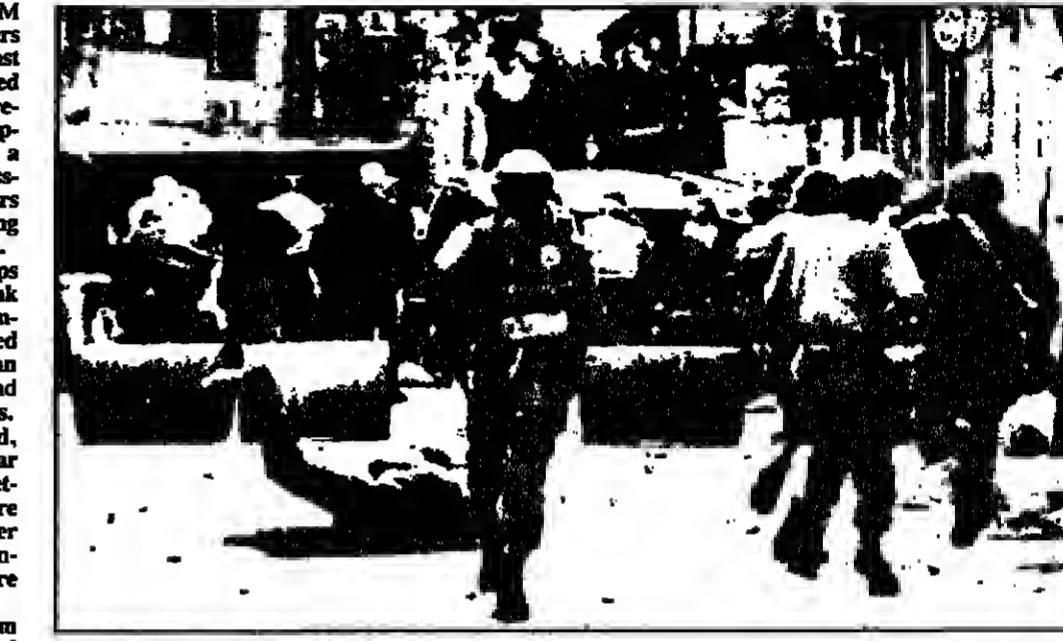

The group said Sunday it clashed with the SLA for two hours and SLA radio said one militiaman was wounded when rockets smashed into his position at the edge of the zone.

Islamic Resistance said Sunday's fighting was near Maydon village on the edge of the "security zone."

The group said the clash began when a joint force of Israeli troops and SLA militiamen tried to advance south of the zone.

ISRAEL'S handling of Palestinian protests in the occupied West Bank and Gaza Strip will dominate the first week of the UNCHR's meetings, which begin in earnest Tuesday day after Monday's opening formalities.

In his speech Monday, Sene called for the "restructuring of the United Nations system" and for finding "better ways to implement the principles of human rights in the world."

The veteran Senegalese diplomat and politician called for the establishment of a "global strategy" on human rights and for developing new mechanisms to safeguard human rights in the world.

Elected by acclamation, Sene singled out human rights violations in the occupied territories, as well as the tragic events in the occupied Arab territories which we daily see through horrifying pictures — these events bring home the urgent problems we must consider," Sene said. "We must maintain the dignity of everyone."

Shultz to visit Moscow to prepare strategic arms pact

MOSCOW (Agencies) — Foreign Minister Edward Shevardnadze and U.S. Secretary of State George Shultz will meet in Moscow on Feb. 21-23 to prepare for a fourth superpower summit and help draft a treaty on cuts in strategic weapons, TASS said Monday.

The official Soviet news agency cited Foreign Ministry spokesman Gennady Gerasimov as the source of its report.

Shevardnadze and Shultz met several times in 1987 to set up last December's meeting in Washington between U.S. President Ronald Reagan and Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev. The two leaders signed a treaty then to ban intermediate-range nuclear missiles.

Reagan and Gorbachev also agreed to meet for a fourth time during the first half of 1988 in Moscow, and said they would seek an accord to cut their long-range nuclear weapons by 50 per cent.

Gerasimov said Shultz's visit would take place in part to conduct the necessary preparation of the draft treaty on 50 per cent reduction of the strategic offensive arms of the sides and to create conditions for President Reagan's forthcoming visit to Moscow to end with a concrete result as has Mikhail Gorbachev's visit to Washington.

He said Shultz and Shevardnadze would discuss other matters "that will be topical at the time of the visit."

Shultz said in a television interview Sunday that a strategic arms treaty on a 50 per cent reduction could be reached this year, but that it would be difficult.

Shultz also flatly rejected the possibility that Washington would soon negotiate a reduction in short-range battlefield nuclear weapons in Europe, as the Soviet Union and West Germany have advocated.

"We're not going to agree to that," Shultz said.

"It's not in the priority of things to negotiate about right now," he said.

He reaffirmed that NATO's arms control priorities are a strategic arms treaty, a reduction in conventional forces and a worldwide ban on chemical weapons.

Iranian 'moderates' reportedly seeking end to Gulf conflict

NEW YORK (R) — The Iranian "moderates" involved in the U.S. arms-for-hostages swap are secretly promoting deal to end the Gulf war with Iraq, Newsweek magazine has said.

Citing "well-placed Middle East sources," the weekly says the moderate Iranians are using back channels — "Europeans, politicians and international businessmen" — to effect a ceasefire in the seve-year-old war. The deal entails Iran's dropping its demand for the ouster of Iraqi President Saddam Hussein. In exchange, Iraq would accept responsibility for starting the war and agree to pay huge reparations.

Iran is reportedly short of revenue to mount its annual winter offensive, Newsweek said.

The moderate Iranians, who worked with Washington to trade U.S. hostages in Lebanon for weapons, are talking to sources would like to put a stop to the killing."

Walters was in this Swiss ski resort attending an international economic conference. He was part of a panel discussing regional conflicts.

In a speech to the conference, he said he believed the Iran-Iraq war could end "around April or May." Asked at the press conference why he thought this, he said "I just have a feeling."

In his wide-ranging speech, Walters said he supported continued aid to the contras who are fighting the leftist Sandinista government in Nicaragua. "We have to keep the Sandinistas at the negotiating table. If Congress rejects aid to the contras I don't think the Sandinistas will continue negotiating."

Addressing the Arab-Israeli conflict, Walters said a resolution of the problem would come only if the two sides made compromises.

"Israel has to give something and the Palestinians have to give something," he said.

He said he was reluctant to outline a peace plan, but that it would have to include provisions for the continued existence of Israel with secure borders as well as giving the Palestinians some right to representation and possibly their own state.

Turkish Prime Minister Turgut Ozal, on the same panel, said that if the Iran-Iraq war continues, "it will increase the danger of the spread of fundamentalism. If the war is stopped, the danger will stop," he said.

Ozal said that to end the war, "a dialogue between each individual Gulf state and Iran on a bilateral basis is necessary." He praised the recent decision of the Gulf Cooperation Council to ask the United Arab Emirates to have such talks with Iran.

French mediator contacts Abu Nidal group

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — French mediator Lucien Bitterlin has established contact with representatives of the Abu Nidal group.

The Panamanian-flag Mare was attacked Saturday and the whereabouts of its crew had baffled rescuers for nearly two days.

One shipping source said the crewmen had been taken to Iran's northern Gulf port of Bushehr where he believed the ship had been heading when it was attacked by Iranian Revolutionary Guards by mistake.

Another shipping source said the vessel was coming from Bushehr.

Early reports from Gulf-based sources said an off-course Iraqi jet had attacked the ship, but later Monday they said Iran's Guards operating from Farsi Island in the northern Gulf hit the vessel some 60 miles north of Bahrain.

The shipping sources said the attack was a mistake and the Guards apparently realised their error and rescued the crew.

"I think (the Iranians) made a mistake and after the attack rescued the crew themselves," one source said.

The Guards attacked the ship around midday Saturday, the sources said.

The attack came only hours after Iraq claimed it had attacked and hit two vessels near the Iranian coast within nine hours.

Lloyds Shipping Intelligence Monday named one vessel hit by attacking Iraqi warplanes as the 231-tonne tanker Khark owned by the National Iranian Tanker Company.

The Khark operates on Iran's oil-shuttle run ferrying oil from the north of the waterway to the safer waters of the south for customers to lift Tehran's oil exports.

The freighter Mare was first spotted ablaze Sunday and shipping sources said the damage to the ship looked like that caused by an Exocet missile, the usual weapon of the Iraqi air force in attacking Iranian shipping.

Shipping sources said the blaze was in the ship's engine room. The sources did not know the nationalities of the crew.

Meanwhile a Singapore-based salvage firm was quoted Monday as saying three, not two, crewmen of one of its tugboats have been killed off Iran, but denied the deaths resulted from an Iraqi missile attack on the small craft.

A Gulf-based shipping executive said the captain and chief engineer of the tug Silko were killed in an Iraqi air raid on an Iranian supertanker, the Coral Cape. They had boarded the supertanker to help deal with damage.

The bodies of the Coral Cape's captain, Roger Hall, and Filipino chief engineer, Rosendo Borros, arrived in Dubai Saturday, according to sources there.

The Cypriot-flag Coral Cape is one of the shuttle tankers used by Iran to carry oil from its big Kharb Island terminal in the northern Gulf to other, safer terminals farther south.

Iraq regularly attacks these ships in an attempt to disrupt Iran's petroleum industry.

Seemco has a number of its tugs under charter to Iran to assist the state-operated tanker fleet.

In addition to west Beirut, Abu Nidal has bases in South Lebanon and Syrian-policed northern and eastern provinces.

Bitterlin, head of a pro-Arab French lobbying group, said on arrival in Beirut Sunday that he was certain the two girls, Virginia, 5, and Marie-Laure, 6, would be freed shortly.

Abu Nidal's group said in a Nov. 8 statement that the girls, their French mother, Jacqueline Valente, 30, and five Belgians were seized aboard the French yacht Silko of the Israeli-occupied Gaza Strip.

It is not clear if the girls carry their mother's family name or that of their father, Pascal Bettle, from whom Ms. Valente is separated.

In a later statement, the group asked to negotiate with Bitterlin to secure the transfer of the girls to an Arab capital for their release.

"I expect their release very soon," Bitterlin said Sunday. "I came (back) at the request of the captors. I think my current visit will last a few days."

In Paris, Bettle told a news conference Sunday that he was "very worried" about his daughters.

"I call on public opinion and President Francois Mitterrand," to help get the children freed, said Bettle, who added that he had been disappointed by the unfulfilled promise by Bitterlin last month.

Bitterlin, a former Gaullist parliament member and present head of the Franco-Arab Solidarity Association, held talks with Abu Nidal's representatives in Lebanon in January, then flew to Ankara in February to discuss the issue.

Libya is Abu Nidal's main backer. The elusive terrorist leader has topped wanted lists in the United States and Europe since he split from the mainstream Patah, the Palestine Liberation Organisation's largest group, in the early 1970s.

The weapons, hidden in oil storage tanks, included 100 pounds (45 kilograms) of Semtex explosives that Libya has allegedly supplied to IRA guerrillas last year, Irish police sources said.

There was no comment from Ireland's Foreign Ministry, but a spokesman said: "It is compatible with other finds that originated in Libya."

About 100 Kalashnikov rifles, 50,000 rounds of ammunition and five heavy machineguns were also uncovered by British police in the biggest arms find by British police since an IRA campaign against British rule in Northern Ireland flared up in 1969.

Libya denies links to huge IRA arms find

BEIRUT (R) — Libya has denied that it was involved with a large Irish Republican Army (IRA) arms cache found on deserted beach in Ireland.

The Libyan Foreign Ministry denies any link to the arms found on the northern shores of Ireland contrary to allegations by British officials and media, "said JANA, the official Libyan News Agency monitored in Beirut.

"Libya, in accordance with its support to liberation movements, supports the struggle of the Irish people for liberation from colonial control," it added.

"Libya is determined to support and enhance cooperation and friendship with Ireland and to create opportunities that will help enhance the good interests of both countries," it said.

Irish police said Friday a huge store of arms found buried on a deserted beach had hardened suspicions of Libyan links to IRA gun-runners.

Turkish press praises Davos meeting while Greeks express mixed views

ANKARA (R) — Turkish commentators said Moody the weekend talks in Switzerland between the Turkish and Greek prime ministers had provided a firm launch pad for better ties between Ankara and Athens.

"A successful step has been taken in Davos and we hope it will continue because, for detente and dialogue to be valid in the Aegean instead of tension and clashes, there is no other way," Hasan Celal said in the left-leaning daily Cumhuriyet.

Turkish Prime Minister Turgut Ozal and Greek Prime Minister Andreas Papandreou agreed on measures to improve ties, including setting up a crisis hotline, and vowed to avoid war.

The NATO allies, guarding the Western Alliance's sensitive south eastern flank, nearly went to war last year over rights in the Aegean Sea. They are also at odds over divided Cyprus.

Mehmet Barlas, writing in the popular liberal daily Gunes, said the meeting produced better results than expected.

"If the dialogue and cooperation between different sections of the community can be increased, both the Cyprus issue and the Aegean dispute can be resolved," Hasan Celal said in the left-leaning daily Cumhuriyet.

Turkish Prime Minister Turgut Ozal and Greek Prime Minister Andreas Papandreou agreed on measures to improve ties, including setting up a crisis hotline, and vowed to avoid war.

"On the contrary the Turkish side at least achieved showing a new face to Europe in order to ensure its entry into the European Community," it said.

But the newspaper said Ozal had more reason to be satisfied as he achieved the dialogue without agreeing to take the issue of disputed rights in the Aegean to the International Court of Justice at The Hague as Greece wanted.

The pro-government Ethnos newspaper said agreement reached between the two leaders was positive but cautioned that no big problems between the two countries had been solved.

The pro-opposition Eleftherios was critical of the meeting, saying Papandreou was returning to Athens empty handed as he achieved no deal on the Aegean and Cyprus problems.

"On the contrary the Turkish side at least achieved showing a new face to Europe in order to ensure its entry into the European Community," it said.

The main benefit for Andreas Papandreou is that the threat of war is taken away from the Aegean Sea and a dialogue is initiated with Turkey, the independent newspaper Eleftherotypia said.

Altan Oymen, in the liberal daily Miliyet, said: "The results of the Davos talks have had a surprise effect."

"The main benefit for Andreas Papandreou is that the threat of war is taken away from the Aegean and Cyprus problems.

Karak, Tafleah telephone network inaugurated

KARAK (Petra) — The government is currently concentrating its efforts on developing the southern regions of the Kingdom, Minister of Transport and Telecommunications Khaled Al Haj Hassan said here Monday.

He said the government was acting upon directives from His Majesty King Hussein which called for improvement of all public services in the south.

Haj Hassan was speaking at a ceremony in Karak inaugurating the new telecommunications project for the Karak and Tafleah governorates, which should provide automatic telephone service to 80 towns and villages.

The total cost of the project was JD 12.5 million, partly covered by a Japanese loan, according to the minister, who said that the project was considered one of the major integrated schemes to be implemented in the Kingdom through the Japanese easy-term loan.

During his inspection of the new telephone exchange, Haj Hassan was briefed on the services offered to the public.

The exchange unit installed in Karak serves Karak, Tafleah and their neighbouring towns and villages.

The project entailed laying telephone networks and setting up 12 main and substations, in addition to constructing 31 buildings in various areas to house equipment and auxiliary telephone exchanges.

At the outset of the tour, the minister visited the Karak governor's house, where he held a meeting with local officials to review postal and telephone services in the region.

2 murders discovered in Azraq

By Ahmad Kreishan
Special to the Jordan Times

AZRAQ — The bullet-riddled bodies of two men were found in the Azraq region northeast of Amman, and police said they were investigating the case.

The police identified the two victims, who they said came from Zarqa and Marka but did not disclose their names.

One of the victims was found lying in a taxi car owned by a taxi office, while the other was found lying on the ground some 300 metres away from the car.

The two bodies were moved to Al Bashir Hospital in Amman for autopsy, where the coroner confirmed that the deaths resulted from the gunshot wounds.

Police sources said that five female workers in a local factory were treated for food poisoning at Al Bashir Hospital. The five had eaten sardines and hummus and drank tea. The girls were between 17 and 23 years old.

Jordan and Kuwait to increase cultural, scientific exchange

AMMAN (J.T.) — Prime Minister Zaid Rifai Monday conferred with Kuwaiti Minister of Education Anwar Abdullah Al Nouri, who later signed an executive programme for the implementation of a cultural and scientific exchange agreement between Jordan and Kuwait.

During the meeting at the prime minister's office, Rifai and Nouri discussed promoting bilateral cooperation in education.

The meeting was attended by Minister of Education Thouqan Hindawi, Minister of Higher Education Nasseruddine Al Assad and Kuwaiti Ambassador to Jordan Ibrahim Al Bahou.

Agreement boosts educational cooperation

The exchange agreement, signed by Hindawi and Nouri, aims to increase cooperation between educational institutions in Jordan and Kuwait through, for instance, assigning three seats for Kuwaiti students at Jordanian universities in return for a similar measure by Kuwait.

The two sides agreed that the Kuwaiti Ministry of Education would employ Jordanian teachers in its schools, and said both countries would exchange visits by educational officials and specialists.

In culture and arts, the two sides will exchange publications and cultural exhibitions and visits by artists.

In the field of information, Jordan and Kuwait said they would facilitate entry of media delegations into each country, and would exchange television programmes.

In sports and youth affairs, the two sides agreed to encourage visits by sports and youth centre teams for training and matches.

They also agreed to provide opportunities for training Jordanian physicians and specialists at the Kuwaiti nuclear medicine and radiation centre.

After the signing ceremony, Hindawi accompanied Nouri on a visit to a vocational school for girls in Ruseifa, where they were briefed on the school's programmes and training facilities.

The director of vocational training at the Education Ministry told the visitors that his department was planning to open 10 vocational schools for girls and six for boys in different parts of the Kingdom in 1988.

Director of Education in Zarqa and Ruseifa Tayseer Arifa said that the Ruseifa school, which cost JD 1 million, has nearly 1,000 students and 60 teachers.

The school contains 13 workshops, lecture halls, a library, a laboratory and recreational grounds.

Nouri arrived in Amman Sunday evening for a four-day visit, during which he is expected to hold more talks with Jordanian ministers and senior officials.

Agricultural exports to Arab countries decreasing as marketing problems persist

AMMAN (J.T.) — Jordan's agricultural exports to neighbouring Arab countries and Gulf states have decreased lately due to political and economic factors, and in part, to Jordan's failure to successfully market its produce in these countries, Minister of Agriculture Marwan Hmoud said Monday.

Addressing representatives of Jordan Valley farmers, the minister said that along to these factors, the Gulf states have begun to curtail agricultural imports in general, as they succeed in developing their own agricultural production.

In addition, Jordanian produce is often priced higher than agricultural commodities from Turkey and a number of East European countries, thus allowing the latter to compete more successfully in Arab markets, according to Hmoud.

He said that the European markets cannot absorb large quantities of Jordanian produce, as they import agricultural commodities only during certain periods of the year. This year, Jordan will export a total of 7,000 tonnes of crops to European countries in accordance with signed agreements, the minister added.

The government realises the problems encountered by farmers in Jordan, especially in marketing crops locally and abroad, and consistently offers assistance to them, Hmoud pointed out. To help solve these problems, the Ministry of Agriculture has been advising farmers to reduce production of traditional crops and increase production of crops in was still incapable of meeting the country's growing consumption demands.

Ghazi Abu Hassam said in a lecture at the University of Jordan that the country continued to suffer from shortages in certain crops and surpluses in others, in addition to facing marketing problems.

During their meeting with Hmoud, several farmers spoke about difficulties they encounter and the need to find new markets for their crops. The farmers urged the government to fix interest rates on their loans.

Before the meeting, the minister opened an exhibition of fruit and vegetables grown in the Jordan Valley, in addition to new strains of crops being introduced to the valley, including fruit from tropical regions.

children Monday from the Dheishe refugee camp.

Bassam Abu Sherif, an adviser to PLO leader Yasser Arafat, told Reuters that Israeli soldiers clamped a curfew on the camp and clashed with inhabitants after the seizure of the children, who were aged 12 and under.

Gangs of settlers forced their way into the camp, situated between Bethlehem and Hebron, and took the children to an unknown destination, he said.

Abu Sherif said the motive for the settlers' action was unclear, adding that information on the incident came direct to PLO Tunis headquarters from the West Bank.

Abu Sherif appealed to United Nations organisations, in particular the U.N. Relief and Works Agency (UNRWA) to intervene to save the children.

A Palestinian group in Damascus also reported that 30 Palestinian children had been kidnapped.

"According to information we received from the occupied territories we learned that the settlers kidnapped 30 children from the Dheishe refugee camp," the Popular Front for the Liberation of Palestine (PFLP) said in a statement.

It said the abduction was part of Israeli attempts to end Palestinian protests in the occupied territories.

King Hussein said that by adhering to its present policies Israel can never achieve anything from this war except more destruction for the Iranian people and instability for Iran and the other countries of the region.

Jordan seeks to harness sun, wind power for remote villages

By Alistair Lyon
Reuter

JURF AL DARAWISH — Dancing Dervishes seeking spiritual power may have spun and twisted in Wadi Jur 800 years ago, giving this Jordanian desert village its name.

But the adherents of the mystical Muslim sect are long-gone and the modern villagers are more interested in the electric power generated by whirling windmills and solar panels.

Jurf Al-Darawish, 170 km south of Amman, is the site of a project studying whether a hybrid system of renewable energy sources can provide power for Jordan's remote villages.

The village was once a Dervish prayer centre. Now most of its 652 residents herd sheep and goats or work at a nearby phosphate mine.

Two 20-kilowatt West German-built windmills were installed here this year, alongside a row of solar water heating panels, and 15-kilowatt U.S.-made photovoltaic cells, which use the sun's rays to generate electricity.

Back-up batteries store energy in case the wind drops and the sun stays hidden. A pumping station three km away also runs on wind power. A concrete hut houses a computer to monitor and distribute the power.

The integrated system, which cost about $1/2 a million, is already lighting houses, streets and the local clinic and will irrigate land.

"We want to show people they can plant vegetables and trees. Given water, the land is suitable for vegetation," said Mohammad Amr, project manager at Jurf Al Darawish.

"We plan to have a model farm with four greenhouses and we will experiment with different irrigation methods."

Electricity is already available

Jurf Al Darawish electrified

AMMAN (Petra) — Electric power was supplied Monday to Jurf Al Darawish, a remote village some 170 kilometres south of Amman, benefiting the village's 300 inhabitants.

The electrification project was a joint venture by the Royal Scientific Society (RSS) and the Jordan Electricity Authority (JEA), and included the installation of twin windmills and solar panels.

The project also entailed installing a high voltage network, setting up 136 pylons and laying cables and low voltage distribution panels, as well as installing lights along the village roads.

RSS sources said that the project, the first of its kind in Jordan, was aimed at providing power for remote areas outside of the national power grid. More projects like this would, ultimately, reduce Jordan's reliance on imported fuel for generating electricity, the sources said.

for 96 per cent of Jordan's estimated 2.8 million population, concentrated in urban centres and farmland.

The four per cent without electricity are dispersed over 40 per cent of the country's area, said Rizeq Taani, head of the wind energy section at the Royal Scientific Society (RSS) which is running the remote village project.

"We believe solar and wind energy can play a big role in remote areas," he told Reuters.

He said one unit able to pump 140 cubic metres of water daily can run in the desert for two years with minimal maintenance.

If we are to develop desert agriculture and stop people from migrating from rural areas, we must bring them water and electricity where they are," Taani said.

Photovoltaic systems have been installed in nine remote locations and they power water pumps at five sites.

"These can mean a lot in the desert, where otherwise they have to truck fuel to generators in all-terrain vehicles," said Marwan Mahmoud, head of the RSS solar energy research centre.

"A small amount of power can solve problems. A two-kilowatt photovoltaic unit can pump, say, 50 cubic metres of water a day from a well 20 to 30 metres deep."

He said one unit able to pump 140 cubic metres of water daily can run in the desert for two years with minimal maintenance.

The two sides also discussed means of developing Italian-Jordanian relations in all fields.

King Hussein and Her Majesty Queen Noor were guests of honour at a lunch hosted by Cossiga and attended by the Jordanian delegation and senior Italian officials.

Queen visits hospital

Queen Noor Monday visited a paediatric hospital in Rome known for its work in children's heart surgery.

The Queen spent the morning at the hospital "Bambini Gesu" greeting convalescent children and signing autographs in the heart surgery and other wards.

During her visit she congratulated the hospital president, Marcello Sacchetti, and his team on their successful work in heart surgery and invited them to visit Jordan.

She was presented with a bouquet of flowers by a 13-year-old boy who read her a message in Arabic. In the hospital's playroom she received drawings by the children of her standing next to the Jordanian flag.

The Egyptian president is on a two-day visit to France. He was scheduled to meet with Premier Jacques Chirac before leaving for Morocco Tuesday.

"The uprising in the occupied territories is in fact the result of unsupportable repression exercised by the Israelis against the Palestinians," Mubarak said. "We cannot afford to wait. We must absolutely relaunch the dynamic of peace."

The press as catalyst

IN the midst of the ongoing Palestinian uprising in the occupied West Bank and Gaza Strip, a pause is in order to pay tribute to the women and men of the news media, who have bravely and honourably portrayed this revolt, focusing the world's attention on the centrality of Palestinianism in the quest for durable peace in the Middle East. This news media — newspaper reporters and television crews — have courageously chronicled the unfolding events in the occupied territories in a remarkable and moving way that touched hearts and provoked consciences throughout the world. The credibility with which it depicted the brutality of the Israeli occupying forces attempting to quell this Palestinian uprising has indeed helped to galvanize world public opinion, including Jewish public opinion, in support of the struggle and aspirations of the Palestinians.

Where would the Palestinian uprising be without the catalytic role of a free and responsible press? Would the tears, blood and agony of the Palestinian people go unnoticed or unrecognised as a part of a compelling human struggle for freedom and liberty? Lest we forget, was it not a free and responsible press which accelerated the process of ending the savagery of the Vietnam War? Is it not true that whenever and wherever a free and responsible press was denied access to the scenes of conflicts, these conflicts persisted? From this follows the conclusion that one of the most effective ways to end conflicts is to promote and facilitate the honourable role of a free and responsible press, in order to drive home the horrors of wars, the insanity of attempts by one people to enslave another and the causes of right against might.

We salute the reporters and T.V. crews who were either harassed or beaten up by Israeli troops to prevent them from carrying out their honourable and indispensable duties in the West Bank and Gaza during the past eight weeks. If it is any comfort to them, their hardships and suffering were definitely not in vain.

ARABIC PRESS EDITORIALS

Al Ra'i: King promotes Arab cause

KING Hussein's tour in European countries comes at a time as the uprising in occupied Palestine is being escalated against intensified repressive measures by Israeli forces against the Arab inhabitants. On the eve of his tour, the King told the West German magazine Der Spiegel about the realities and the situation in the Middle East region and the crux of the Arab-Israeli conflict, which is the Palestine problem. The King reiterated Jordan's demand for an international peace conference and also the superpowers to shoulder their responsibility towards peace in the region. The King is carrying to the European nations the Arab Nation's views with regard to the Palestine problem and will discuss the Arab-Israeli conflict and the question of an international conference with the European leaders. He is going to demand that peace based on justice be established and that the U.S. should be made to respond to the call of the international community and exercise pressure on Israel to conform to the will of the nations of the world and the requirements of peace. Israel's rejection of the conference's idea coupled with U.S. backing, is now impeding the convening of this conference which is designed to implement Security Council Resolutions 242 and 338.

Al Dustour: King calls for conference

KING Hussein reiterated Jordan's stand with regard to the Middle East issue and called again for the need to resolve it through an international peace conference. The King made the statement on the eve of his European tour where he hopes to enlist more support for the conference's idea and the rights of the Palestinians in their homeland. The King called on the international community and world organisations to help solve this problem which has been plaguing the peoples of the Middle East. His call came amidst intensified Israeli acts of aggression and oppression to quell the Arab people's uprising. His call for an international conference is more urgent now in view of the developments in the occupied Arab territories and as more and more world nations are supporting a durable settlement for this problem. The King will be presenting Jordan's views as well as those of the Arab countries which support such views and call for a just settlement.

Sawt Al Shaab: King outlines Arab stand

KING Hussein outlined the Arab stand with regard to the situation in the Middle East in a statement published by the West German magazine Der Spiegel. In his statement the monarch said that the members of the U.N. Security Council bear a serious responsibility towards re-establishing peace in the Middle East based on the implementation of Resolutions 242 and 338. He also stressed the need for the PLO to be invited to an international conference along side the other concerned parties in the Arab-Israeli conflict provided that the organisation renounce violence and accept the two resolutions. The King made it clear that the whole issue must be settled on two levels: With the Palestine people represented by the PLO, and with the Arab governments which support the PLO in its endeavours. The King is advocating this cause and Arab views during his tour abroad, and he is relentlessly seeking the recognition of the Palestinian people in their homeland. The monarch made it clear also that Jerusalem which stands out as a symbol of peace should return to its Arab sovereignty.

The View From Second Circle

Let the statesmen step forward

WHILE the Palestinians in Palestine have spent the last two months in sustained expression of their national aspirations, most of the western world, and particularly the international press, has been asking wrong or irrelevant questions.

1. The Palestinian outburst was no surprise at all, given that the Palestinians in the West Bank and Gaza have been under Israeli military occupation for 20 years, that concentrations of Palestinians throughout the Arab hinterland — in the Mashreq, Maghreb and Gulf — are unable to express their sentiments in an organised public manner, and that the Palestinians, with the support of the rest of the Arabs, have been struggling for national rights, personal freedom and human dignity since shortly after the turn of the century. It is only the sustained and widespread scale of the latest uprising, rather than its nature or meaning, which is novel this time around.

2. Questions of who leads the uprising are simplistic, and largely irrelevant, despite their frequency these days. The Palestinians are not engaged in a popularity contest, or a Semitic version of the United States' Democratic Party primaries to choose a leader from among nearly a dozen hopefuls or would-be pretenders. Most western analysts — many of whom have spent the past two years trying to write off the Palestine Liberation Organisation (PLO) as a political has-been — have spent the past two months wondering about the PLO's role in the present events. The fact is, whether they like it or not, that the uprising is the logical, organic culmination of the preservation, nurturing and sustenance of the Palestinian national identity which has been championed, almost single-handedly, by the PLO for the past 20 years.

It is true that the PLO has not achieved any substantive political advances in the last two decades, in the sense of liberating occupied land; what is has done, and this is the true significance of both the PLO and the current uprising, is to have fortified a Palestinian national identity that the world was prepared to forget in the 1960s. As such, the uprising is the culmination of the current historical phase of Palestinian nationalism, and the epitome of the national identity which the PLO has symbolised for the last two decades.

3. Most Arab leaders and public commentators have warned for years that the Arab-Israeli and Palestinian-Israeli status quo would not last forever, without an appropriate reaction, which has now come. Why is it that the world assumes a whole new Palestinian leadership has suddenly emerged in Palestine and taken over from the PLO, as we hear from many Western analysts? The indigenous leadership in the West Bank and Gaza is asking for precisely the same things the PLO and the Arab states have sought for most of this century, or since the patriarch of the modern Hashemite dynasty, Sbeir Hussein of Mecca, engaged the British colonial leadership in a quest for Arab sovereignty and dignity in 1915. The young men on the streets of the West Bank and Gaza, the Palestinians in Israel, the PLO leaders in Tunis and Baghdad, the Palestinian refugees in camps in several Arab states, and middle class Palestinians throughout the Arab World and further afield, all aspire to the same goal: National self-determination.

4. We are witnessing today a historic development that parallels

Educated Afghans don't want Islamic republic

By Scheherezade Faramarzi
The Associated Press

PESHAWAR, Pakistan — Afghanistan's best-educated citizens seem split over the role of Islam in a future government, with some hoping for an Islamic state and others for a secular republic.

Some analysts in Pakistan, where some 4 million Afghan refugees live, expect those who favour a secular state to lose out in any power struggle if Soviet troops withdraw.

"This minority cannot change the destiny of Afghanistan," said Mohammad Ishaq, a former professor of literature at Kabul University. "The best it can do is try to be enslaved by its political system."

But it is unknown what effect on a future government could come from educated Afghans now in Kabul, many of whom have Soviet training and who presumably could favour a secular state.

About 6 per cent of Afghans have university education. Educated Afghans interviewed in Peshawar believe most of these educated citizens, along with the guerrillas fighting the Soviet-backed government and the nation's population overall, would opt for some form of Islamic state.

However, many forms of Islamic government are possible. The nation could be ruled by a religious leader; have a lay government but Islamic-style religious laws; or almost completely secular with Islam recognised nonetheless as the state religion and its practice officially encouraged.

"If men don't want us around, then they can have the whole country to themselves," she said.

Most Afghans who live in camps around Peshawar do not allow their women to go out of the house, even veiled.

One Afghan man, Saeb Shah Rehmani, said women had no political judgment.

"What do they understand?" he asked.

Educated Afghans interviewed in Peshawar expressed doubt that Western-style democracy would ever emerge in their country. But they favoured their future leaders coming from among those now fighting the Communists inside Afghanistan, rather than those delivering speeches in Peshawar and to the media.

Such popular figures include the guerrilla commanders Ahmad Shah Massoud, Ismail Khan, Ostad Farid, Abdul Haq and Jalaleddin Haqqani.

"It is not a question whether they deserve it or not," said Ishaq. "They have the power in Afghanistan. Without them, it will be difficult to bring stability to Afghanistan."

Mohammad Ashour Ali, 35, a refugee at the Mattanu camp south of Peshawar, said the days of Zahir Shah, who was king before the 1978 Communist takeover, were good.

the period after 1967. After the 1967 defeat, the Palestinians decided to take their destiny into their own hands, having seen that the international community and the Arab states were unable to grant the Palestinians their national rights. The new generation of Palestinian leaders which emerged after 1967 reasserted the Palestinian struggle for national rights, using all possible means, including diplomacy and acts of violence and terror. Now, 20 years later, the same thing has happened again: A Palestinian population beset with a sense of hopelessness, disgruntled with pan-Arab and international efforts and aware of the strength of the right-wing Likud faction in Israel, has turned to itself, to its identity and to its own activism.

This is a natural development in a historical conflict which started with the birth of modern political Zionism in 1896, and which will reach its 100th anniversary in eight more years. While everyone was so busy last year noting the 20th anniversary of the Israeli occupation of the West Bank and Gaza, did nobody notice that 40 years — which makes a generation — have passed since the creation of the state of Israel by the United Nations in 1947?

5. In the early 1970s, having fortified itself with confidence and self-respect, the Palestinian leadership started to shift from armed struggle to diplomacy. The Palestinians made the momentous decision to accept a partition of Palestine and to seek a Palestinian state in the West Bank and Gaza, with East Jerusalem as its capital. Having caught the attention of the world, the Palestinians showed political maturity and diplomatic courage, but success was elusive. The Israelis were not impressed, and Palestinian calls for coexistence were ignored by the vast majority of Israelis. Today, the Palestinians are at a similar juncture in their struggle for national rights. They have once again taken matters into their own hands, and have once again caught the attention of the world. This time, though, they are operating in an environment in which there are many more Israelis who are willing to consider the idea of ending the occupation, partitioning Palestine and coexisting next to a Palestinian political entity whose specific nature remains to be defined by all concerned parties.

It is not ironic that since the late 1970s, a new generation of Israelis has also come to power, preaching messianic right to all the land of Palestine. As Palestinian nationalism asserts itself again and again, every time in a more dynamic and dramatic manner, we should not be surprised that an increasing number of Israelis during the past decade have reacted by negating the existence of a Palestinian nation. Yet, some Israelis have reacted by recognising the reality of Palestinian nationalism, and expressing their willingness to coexist with it.

The most important question about the Palestinian uprising today, therefore, is not who leads it, or why it happened, but rather how it might effect political change among Israelis. There are intriguing signs — which started with the Likud overtures to the Palestinians last year — that some Likud officials have started to appreciate that the Arab-Israeli conflict can only be resolved on the basis of the principle of the simultaneous exercise of national rights and sovereignty by both Palestinians and Israelis. We will find out

The divided people of Rafah

By Tom Porteous

RAFAH, Egypt — Tangled in an overhead electricity cable, the Palestinian flag flutters in the sea breeze above one of the muddy streets which runs between the rows of low breezeway houses of Cantata refugee camp. Several hundred yards away, in Israeli-occupied Gaza on "the other side," the light blue "Star of David" flies above a grey concrete machine-gun tower.

In between stretches the wide no-man's-land of barbed wire and steel fencing which marks the limit of Israel's withdrawal from Sinai in 1984. They call it the "shouting fence," because until the troubles started last month, the divided people of Rafah were allowed to gather at the fence at certain times of day and shout greetings and messages at one another across the 40 yards of tangled wire. Fere the young Palestinian men of Canada camp, stranded in Egypt six years ago, this shouting was their only contact with friends and relatives on "the other side."

Now, because of the uprising in the occupied territories, the shouting has had to stop. Since what is widely believed to have been a Palestinian attack on an Israeli patrol from the Egyptian side of the fence in December, the Egyptian authorities have bulldozed a wide security road along their side of the wire. Egyptian police stationed at regular intervals along the new road keep people politely and firmly to keep away from the fence.

Nonetheless, the graduality of the rioting in the Gaza Strip now imposes itself regularly on the Palestinians stranded on the Egyptian side. "Almost every day we can hear the shouting and then the shooting and then the screaming and then the tear gas it is blown across the fence and we can feel it in our eyes. And when we hear someone has been killed we know we shall soon discover he was a neighbour or a friend, an uncle or a cousin."

Recently the boys of Canada camp have taken to demonstrating in response, shouting and screaming and burning tyres, to release the tension and to let friends and cousins on the other side know that they are with them. No one I spoke to on the Egyptian side said the Egyptian pounds ($70). "For all of us that is too much," said Mohammad, a 24 year old university graduate who runs the cafeteria in the camp's main street. "But even if you do get a permit, the Israelis sometimes make a point of tearing it up in front of you at the border and sending you back to the camp... for young men like me it is forbidden to visit the other side altogether."

Prospects are bleak for the young men of Canada camp, even though many of them have spent a small fortune (more than $5,000 in some cases) on a university education which is automatically denied for their Egyptian contemporaries. Egypt, which administered the Gaza Strip from 1948 until the '67 war, is grappling unsuccessfully with overpopulation and unemployment at home. The government gives few privileges to the Palestinian refugees of the camp, who are formally denied such rights as owning land.

In the battle waged in the camps between hope and despair, Al Intifada, the uprising now boiling in the territories — or what several young men called Al Thawra (the revolution) appears to be most valuable weapon against despair. It has given us hope, said Mohammad in the flyblown cafeteria of Canada camp. Away in the north we could make out the monotonous drone of the vigilant Israeli reconnaissance plane circling above occupied Rafah. "The only hope is return to the homeland" — The Middle East International, London.

Saudis move closer to Soviet Union

By Aly Mahmoud

The Associated Press

MANAMA, Bahrain — The visit to Moscow of Saudi Arabia's foreign minister, Prince Saud Al Faisal, has fuelled speculation the kingdom may resume diplomatic ties with the Soviet Union after a 50-year break, a move with far-reaching implications in the region.

Ostensibly, the three-day visit is part of King Fahd's campaign to enlist support from the five permanent members of the United Nations Security Council for the Gulf Cooperation Council's effort to mediate a ceasefire in the Iran-Iraq war.

The 7-year-old conflict and fundamentalist Iran's threat to the conservative Gulf Arab states is the region's biggest worry. Moscow is energetically seeking Washington's support for Israel and its clandestine arms sales to Iran. Most Arab states traditionally aligned with the West.

Despite U.S. intervention in the Gulf to protect shipping from Iranian attack, there is resentment of Washington's support for Israel and its clandestine arms sales to Iran. Most Arab states support Iraq in the Gulf conflict.

The Soviets backed the Security Council's July 20 resolution for a Gulf war ceasefire, but have been reluctant to support slapping an arms embargo on Iran for failing to comply with that resolution.

The Soviets, by maintaining relations with both sides in the war, have some leverage in Tehran that could help the Gulf Arabs in their quest for a ceasefire. But just how far Moscow can go in Tehran remains questionable.

Resuming relations with Saudi Arabia, the non-Communist world's largest oil producer and a long-time U.S. ally, would be a major triumph for Gorbachev.

Apart from political considerations, the Soviets in the long-term look to the Gulf as a future source of oil.

The Soviets, by maintaining relations with both sides in the war, have some leverage in Tehran that could help the Gulf Arabs in their quest for a ceasefire. But just how far Moscow can go in Tehran remains questionable.

Under Gorbachev, the Soviets have made diplomatic gains across the Arab World and have made overtures toward Israel. Moscow has aimed its new focus mainly at moderate Arab states traditionally aligned with the West.

The Soviets, by maintaining relations with both sides in the war, have some leverage in Tehran that could help the Gulf Arabs in their quest for a ceasefire. But just how far Moscow can go in Tehran remains questionable.

Arab diplomats said that going along with U.S. call for an arms embargo to pressure Tehran into ending the war, could be the quid pro quo that Riyadh would seek from the Soviets in return for reestablishing diplomatic ties.

Saudi officials told reporters privately that Prince Saudi will discuss "matters of mutual interest" in Moscow, underlining the contention that much was at stake in the Moscow visit.

Abu Dhabi's Al Ittihad newspaper quoted Prince Saudi as telling its Moscow correspondent that he "does not exclude discussion of restoring diplomatic ties between Riyadh and Moscow."

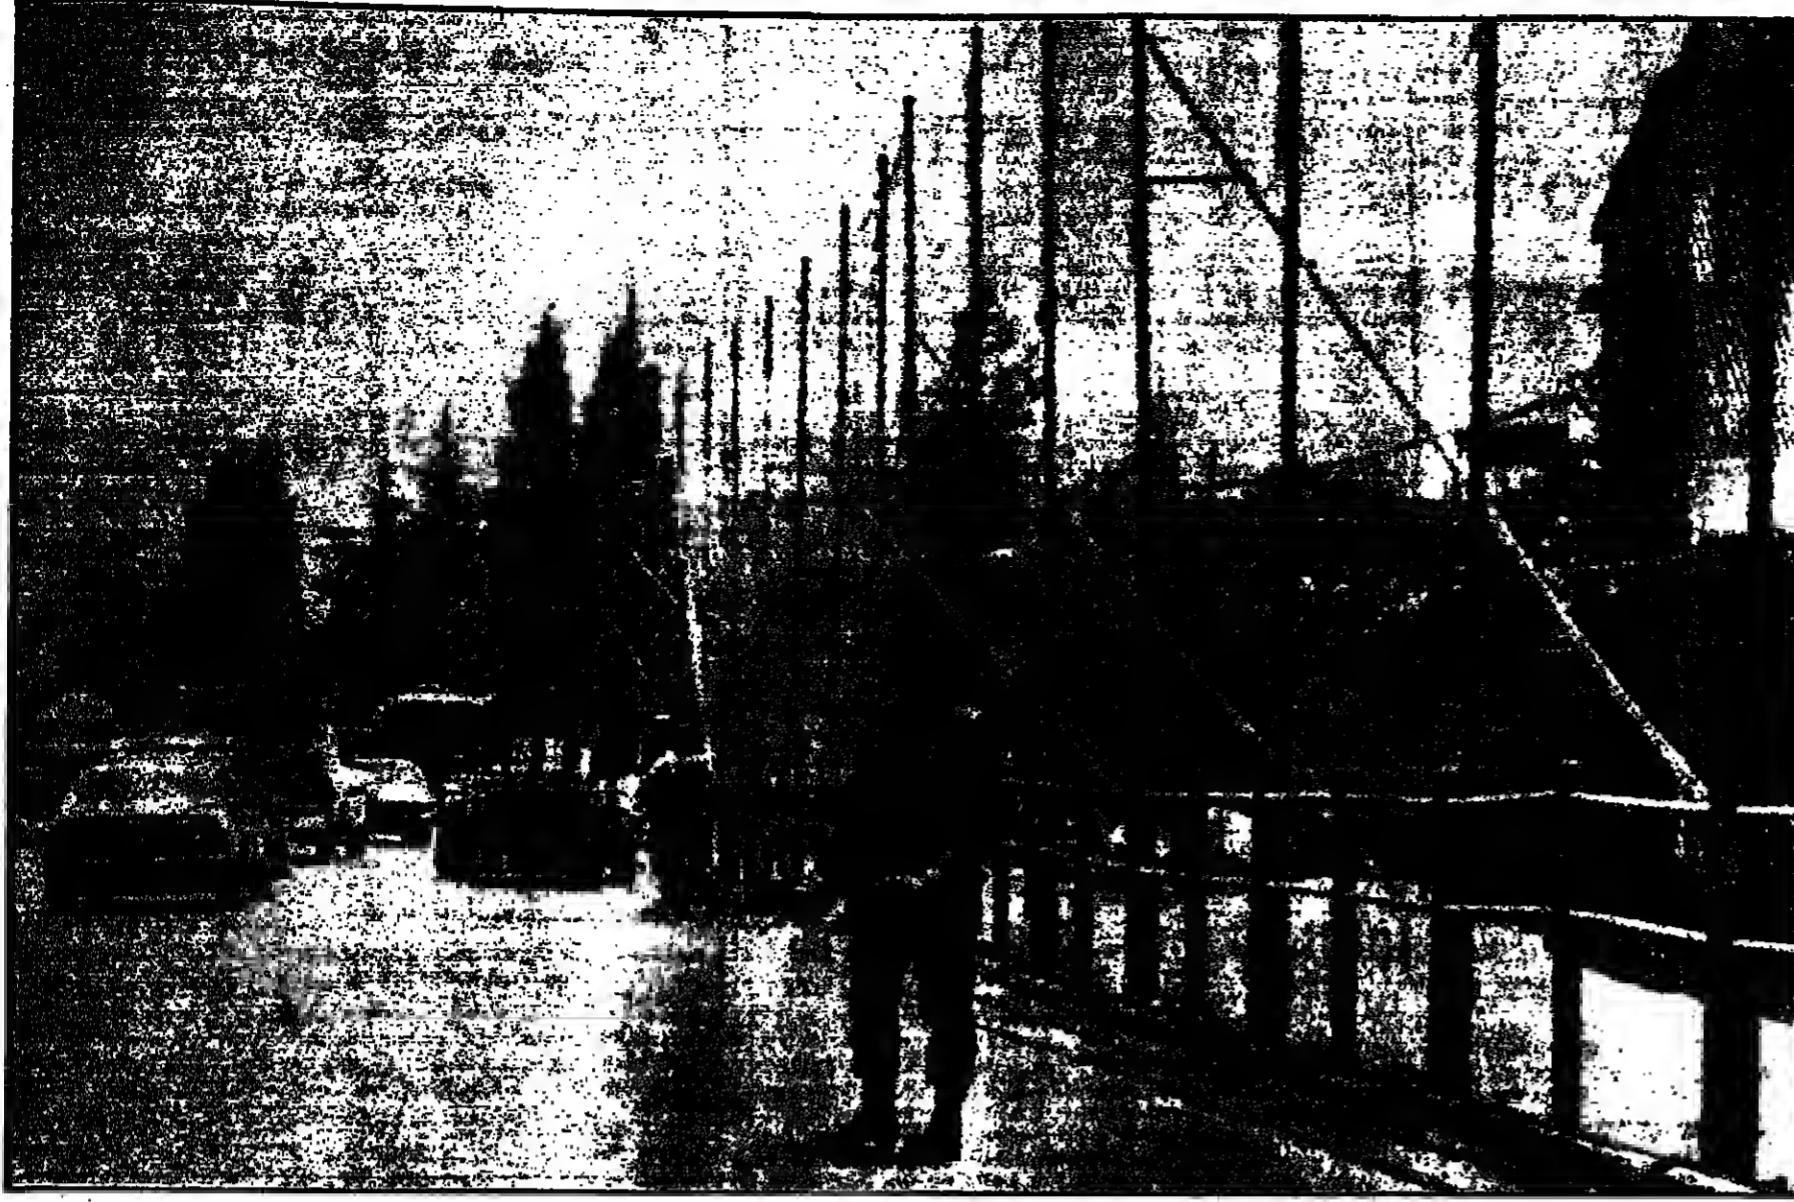

Soviet foreign ministry spokesman Gennady Gerasimov said Prince Saudi will confer with Soviet Foreign Minister Eduard Shevardnadze and President Andrei Gromyko.

The Kuwaiti connection

Kuwait's Al Anbaa daily said the Kuwaiti government was instrumental in arranging Prince Saudi's visit which it claimed was aimed primarily at "reestablishing diplomatic relations between the two countries" and discussing other issues, including Afghanistan.

The Saudis have indicated in the past that they would be willing to weigh the feasibility of resuming diplomatic relations with Moscow if the Soviets withdrew their troops from Afghanistan.

Saudi Arabia, a Muslim state whose royal family calls itself guardian of Islam's holiest shrines, has for decades rejected Communism as akin to atheism and refused to have diplomatic ties with East bloc countries.</

AT THE DEHAISHE refugee camp in Bethlehem, on the main road south to Hebron and the Jewish settlements that lie in the surrounding hills, the Israeli army has already reerected the 20-foot wire mesh fence — designed to protect passing traffic from stone-throwers — after the Palestinians inside had sawed through the metal poles that held it up.

As an act of rebellion, the toppling of the Dehaishe fence occupies only a modest place in the (interim) catalogue of six weeks of mass resistance to Israeli rule in the West Bank and Gaza Strip. With 40 Palestinians dead, hundreds wounded, beaten and arrested, a little nocturnal pole-cutting will be barely a footnote in future accounts of the "uprising" that has impressed — if not shaken — the entire world.

But the destruction of the fence, however short-lived serves as a handy symbol for what has happened in the occupied territories since December 9, when the trouble first erupted in Gaza. "Enough," the Palestinians — in Dehaishe and elsewhere — are saying. "We have had enough of being caged, contained, oppressed and forgotten. We cannot stand it any longer."

Surprise at the scope and level of the uprising is not confined to the Israelis, who are accustomed, after the two decades that have elapsed since the 1967 war, to periodic outbursts of rage from the 1.5 million Palestinians they rule. The Palestinians themselves have been taken aback by the power they have unleashed. And now they seem determined to exploit what they have gained. "We have achieved more in the last six weeks than we have achieved in the last 20 years," says a left-winger in Ramallah. "Now we have a new yardstick. The uprising will continue."

May be. The gradual lifting of blockades and curfews imposed on all eight refugee camps in the Gaza Strip will be the first major test of Israel's cautious hope that the Arabs have been battered and beaten into submission. Dependence on the Israeli economy — more than the sealed border with Jordan, the much-vaunted efficiency of the Shin Bet internal security service, or the permanent disarray in PLO and Arab ranks — is the one chain that cannot ever be really severed. More than 100,000 Palestinian breadwinners simply cannot stop work indefinitely.

Yet what happens next is, in a sense, less important than what has already happened. "If what the Israelis are trying to do is to break people's backs and stop their resistance, they might manage to achieve a period of calm," said one young refugee in Gaza. "But they have put more hatred into people's hearts and this will create more resistance and more solidarity."

It is hard to argue with this simple conclusion. What really distinguishes this uprising from previous bouts of disturbances is that virtually everyone has been touched by it, even if they have not personally thrown stones or petrol bombs, burned tyres, been tear-gassed, beaten, shot or arrested. "Wherever you throw a stone today," said an old man in the West Bank town of Qalqilia, "you will find a well whose waters will be drunk by future generations thirsting for pride and identity."

Gaza, with the unchanging squalor and misery of its refugee camps, has captured most of the attention these past weeks, and not just because of Mr. David Mellor's outrage. And yet the violent confrontations between Israeli soldiers and Palestinian women and children in the mean alleyways of Jabalya or Burj el-Barajneh are less significant than what has been taking place elsewhere, where people have far more to lose.

Short of conducting a major public opinion poll (impossible under the constraints of military occupation) there is no way of really knowing how Palestinians have changed since December 9.

"This is not England," said a harassed shop-owner in Ramallah, looking anxiously at both the teenage Palestinian strike-enforcers and the baton-wielding Israeli Border Policemen across the road. "We are not free to say what we really think."

But actions speak loudest of all, and the continuing commercial strikes in Ramallah and East Jerusalem are eloquent testimony to the depth of popular feeling that this uprising is going somewhere. The mobilisation of the middle classes is novelty that cannot be ignored. So is the rapidly dawning realisation that the accumulated dehumanisation of all classes of Palestinians has had a profound effect in creating a new and almost dizzying sense of solidarity.

"Israel," says a leading nationalist in East Jerusalem, "has created this uprising by default. They have antagonised everyone, whether he is a merchant or a worker. Even the collaborators feel betrayed. In their empire the British created a class of people who benefited from the colonial presence. The Israelis have not done this. And what does all this talk about spontaneity mean? Does it imply that no-one expected it to happen? Then they must be idiots."

The villages, where 60 per cent of all West Bankers still live, matter too. The Israelis recognise this years ago when they tried to create their "Village Leagues" as a counterweight to urban politicians. The majority of those Palestinians convicted for serious security offences — involving weapons and bombs, not stones and tyres — are villagers who have worked inside pre-1967 Israel and seen their own lives thrown into stark and humiliating contrast.

Jewish settlements built on expropriated village land, punishing VAT and income tax for businesses, the beating and harassment of workers, the closure of universities, the encroachment of newspapers, the encroachments of Jewish religious zealots on Muslim holy places mean that there is something bad for everyone in occupation.

"Settlers come from the Soviet Union and build homes with American dollars," complains a conservative West Bank politician, "but a villager cannot get permission to build two more rooms on his ancestral land. If you build without a licence they will demolish your house. If you apply for a licence you don't get fed the volcano."

Much has been made — and rightly so — of the new generation of Palestinian children who have grown up under Israeli rule and know no fear. But this is not just a childrens' uprising, nor an insurrection of the dispossessed, the have-nots leading on the haves, the refugee camps against townspeople who have never lost their homes.

Mobilisation is a more accurate word than radicalisation. "Smuggling food into the refugee camps and the creation of voluntary popular committees in streets and neighbourhoods is more important than the violence," says a leading radical. "People have gone beyond ideology and have come down to the practical issues. They have learned that dependence is a two-way street and become much more aware of their ability to harm Israel." Elias Freij, the mayor of Bethlehem, and no firebrand, makes the same point: "People have reached one conclusion: No-one is going to help us unless we help ourselves."

The question of organisation remains an important one. The continuing appearance of underground leaflets calling for more strikes and protests attests to the existence of some policy-making, although coordination is bedevilled by perennial disagreements between the mainstream PLO Fatah movement, the DFLP and the PFLP.

The Communists have been sceptical from the start about the absence of clearly defined goals for the uprising and the ability of the masses to stay away from work in Israel. But growing coordination between Fatah and Islamic fundamentalists in Gaza — and the decision to allow people to return to work when the camp curfews are lifted — shows that things are starting to function and that there is some long-term thinking going on. The power is being harnessed: The Israelis simply cannot arrest everyone.

Concrete gains are still hard to imagine. Despite the mounting panic on the Israeli side and the belated emergence of deep domestic divisions about the cost of occupation and the moral bankruptcy of the brutality it requires, the Palestinians have yet to achieve actual political change.

Waiting for the outcome of the next Israeli general elections is no answer. Even if the result is significantly different from the deadlock that produced the paralysed national unity coalition in 1984, the Labour Party cannot and will not meet even basic Arab demands.

"If we asked them to stop settlements, would they agree?" asks Elias Freij, without expecting an answer. "If we asked them to accept the Reagan plan, would they accept it? Or implement full autonomy according to the Egyptian model. Or stop the deportations. Or throw Sharon out of the Muslim quarter of the Old City. Would they?"

Thus popular expectations may be exaggerated — in itself a dangerous development for those concerned to keep the occupation working smoothly, especially when Palestinian activists are already complaining privately that PLO money has not come in to underpin the resistance.

"The Zionists are not stronger than America, and we are not weaker than the people of Vietnam," declared one of the leaflets distributed last week in the name of the "United National Command for the Escalation of the Uprising." If rhetoric outstrips reality too quickly, the uprising will ultimately fail.

Palestinian press in the uprising

By Daoud Kuitab

THE PRESS has become the latest scapegoat in the Palestinian uprising. Foreign and local journalists are being blamed for the continuation and escalation of the demonstrations. As a result of this claim, journalists are being harassed and kept out of sensitive areas as well as being arrested.

The most common Israeli argument is that the Palestinian demonstrators get excited when they see journalists or TV crews. No explanation, however, has been provided for the continuation of these demonstrations after the press has been kept out of, for example, most of the Gaza Strip. Nor are there explanations for the demonstrations in places where there are no journalists.

The army has distributed copies of a blank order which any Israeli officer can fill out on the spot declaring certain areas a closed military zone. When pushed by journalists, the army explained that any officer has the legal power to declare, verbally, areas to be closed without a written order. In fact one officer explained that the existing law permits an officer to declare an area to be closed military area when a journalist arrives and then to declare it open the moment the journalist leaves.

Palestinian journalists have suffered most. They have been arrested, placed under administrative detention, beaten and intimidated. The newspapers for which they work have been suffering massive censorship, cuts and banning orders. The chairman of the Arab Journalists Association, Radwan Abu Ayyash, was placed under administrative detention for six months last December. His deputy, Salah Zahalka, was arrested in January and is still held. Al

Fajr editor, Hanna Simiora, has been arrested and released on bail twice — on both occasions the Israelis were attempting to prevent him calling a press conference. Another member of the Arab Journalists Association, Sam'an Khuri, has also been placed under six-month administrative detention, as has Hani Issawi, a Jerusalem journalist. Khuri works with Agence France Presse. Mohammad Zubaiqa, a stringer for a number of local and foreign papers was arrested for two days for questioning about a planned press conference. The border patrol beat him up, leaving scars on his face.

Palestinian newspaper editors are saying that the present censorship is the worst ever. Articles translated from the Israeli press which used to be allowed automatically are now heavily censored. One newspaper, Al-Sha'b, was punished with a ten-day closure because it published a translated article without approval from the censors. Banning newspapers from West Bank and Gaza distribution (other than East Jerusalem) has become a weapon the Israelis often use. The seriousness of the Israelis was seen when they banned the leading paper Al-Quds from distribution for a month. It was later reduced to 18 days.

This crackdown has resulted in changes within the Palestinian community. Palestinian journalists are spending more time and effort distributing their information to Israeli and foreign journalists rather than writing it for their own papers. Many believe that this is why Israel started to arrest journalists. Palestinian press people have also acted as guides and escorts, taking foreign journalists to Gaza and West Bank hot spots — Middle East International, London.

Study finds aspirin cuts heart attack risk An aspirin every other day keeps heart attacks away

USIA

WASHINGTON — A nationwide study has shown that an aspirin tablet taken every other day can reduce the risk of having a heart attack almost in half.

U.S. heart experts told reporters January 27 that the research provides strong evidence that aspirin, a common painkiller, will be a major weapon against cardiovascular disease, the nation's number one killer. Heart attacks and stroke cause 48 per cent of all deaths in the United States, almost one million deaths each year. "Similarly, even though women have a lower incidence of heart attack than do men, women with risk factors might well be prescribed aspirin to prevent heart attacks."

Medical experts believe that aspirin works by inhibiting the aggregation of platelets, a cellular component of the blood responsible for clotting. At the site of a narrowed artery, platelets form a mesh that ultimately leads to a clot, completely obstructing the flow of blood through the artery.

However, doctors cautioned that aspirin could decrease blood clotting too much in some individuals. For example, the study showed that there was a small, though not statistically significant, excess of death from strokes among those in the study who received aspirin. The strokes were presumably caused by hemorrhaging in the brain.

In the study, which began in 1981, half of the physicians took aspirin for nearly five years while the rest received placebo, a harmless substitute that looked and tasted like aspirin. There were 104 heart attacks among the aspirin users, five of them fatal, and 189 heart attacks in the comparison group, including 18 heart attack deaths. There were also 80 strokes in the aspirin group and 70 among the others.

Consult your physician

Dr. Claude Lenfant, director of the National Heart, Lung and Blood Institute, cautioned however that the general public should not take the findings as an indication that everyone should start taking aspirin, and that a decision to use aspirin to prevent heart attack should only be made by a person after consulting with a physician.

"I hope this won't be given to the whole world as a panacea to stay alive forever," he said.

The doctors said that in general anyone with risk factors for heart disease should be considered candidates for routine use of aspirin.

"Men with coronary risk factors such as high blood cholesterol, hypertension, diabetes or a family history (of heart attacks) might well be included as aspirin

World health ministers vow urgent action to combat AIDS

By Claudio Rader
Reuter

LONDON — The world's health ministers Thursday (Jan. 28) pledged urgent action to combat the serious threat to humanity posed by AIDS at the end of three days of the highest-level talks held on the disease.

Ministers and AIDS experts from 148 countries and the Vatican agreed that only "informed and responsible behaviour" would help to stop the spread of AIDS, for which no vaccine or cure has yet been found.

"Since AIDS is a global problem that poses serious threat to humanity, urgent action by all governments and people of the world over is needed," a declaration said.

"The single most important component of national AIDS programmes is information and education because HIV transmission can be prevented through informed and responsible behaviour."

Organisers said the conference, sponsored jointly by the World Health Organisation (WHO) and the British government, was the largest gathering by health ministers on any health issue.

Jonathan Mann, director of WHO's special programme on AIDS, called the document an extraordinary example of consensus and said great strides had been made in learning about the disease.

One million people are expected to have AIDS by 1991 and several hundred million others have behaviour that puts them at risk of getting it, according to the WHO.

"Two years ago it would have been inconceivable to see a meeting of the kind we have just participated in," he said.

"There will always be differences, there are cultural differences, there are political differences (but) I think it must be stressed that this is an extraordinary consensus... Now it's a matter of further translating the theory and the consensus into reality."

Programmes and campaigns

Delegates agreed to attack the spread of acquired immune deficiency syndrome with special programmes within their national health systems and to recommend to their governments setting up AIDS coordinating committees bringing together all sectors.

Education campaigns should be culturally appropriate and take into account "different lifestyles, human and spiritual values" in fighting the disease, which is transmitted mainly through sex, blood contact and from mother to child.

Prevention programmes should also safeguard the human rights and dignity of the 75,000 AIDS sufferers worldwide, the five to 10 million people thought to be infected with HIV (human immunodeficiency virus) and those in special risk groups — such as homosexual men and intravenous drug users.

One million people are expected to have AIDS by 1991 and several hundred million others have behaviour that puts them at risk of getting it, according to the WHO.

"Discrimination against, and stigmatisation of, HIV-infected people and with population groups undermine public health and must be avoided," the declaration said.

But it stopped short of condemning countries which have adopted restrictive measures in the face of AIDS such as China and Belgium, which require foreign residents to be tested for AIDS.

WHO officials said the conference had been an excellent opportunity for ministers from the Third World — parts of Africa like Tanzania, Kenya and Uganda have been particularly hard-hit — to learn from the experience of the developed world.

WHO to lead the fight

The declaration called on WHO, spending $66 million this year on AIDS prevention, to continue to lead the fight against the disease and to support and strengthen national programmes, particularly in developing countries.

Mann praised Africa for its work against AIDS but said lack of resources made it a priority area for help Asia, where the number of AIDS cases is still very limited, was also a priority.

Different approaches

Talks by many of the 114 ministers and 45 senior delegates present revealed widely different approaches to AIDS.

In Denmark, which uses the most straightforward language and images, humour is one of the tools used to get the message across, including six-meter-long posters on the sides of buses and cartoon booklets on condom use for teenagers. Explicit videos aired on television and at schools show homosexuals and heterosexuals engaged in "safe sex."

In Kenya, prostitutes organised into self-help groups teach each other about "safe sex" through songs and skits and have greatly reduced the incidence of HIV infection among them.

Redskins make Super Bowl history with devastating win over Broncos

SAN DIEGO, California (Agencies) — The Washington Redskins beat the Denver Broncos 42-10 in the Super Bowl Sunday with the most devastating offensive explosion in the history of football's season finale.

The Redskins were sparked by Doug Williams, the first black quarterback to lead his team in a Super Bowl, who was voted the game's most valuable player for completely upstaging his opposite number — football's golden boy John Elway.

For Washington, it was their second Super Bowl victory in six years, the last in 1983. The Broncos suffered their second straight Super Bowl defeat, having lost 39-20 to the New York Giants last year.

Super Bowl XXII was decided in a dramatic second quarter when Washington, trailing 10-0, exploded for 35 unanswered points — the highest tally in a quarter in Super Bowl history.

The Redskins scored on all five second-quarter possessions — four tallies on touchdown passes by Williams which tied a Super Bowl record. The explosion came after the quarterback had limped off at the end of the first quarter with a sprained knee.

Williams, 32, who started the season as Washington's number two quarterback, also broke the record for Super Bowl passing with a total of 340 yards, nearly all in the second quarter. His principal aides in the demolition of Denver were wide receiver Ricky Sanders and running back Timmy Smith.

Records set

Sanders caught nine passes for 193 yards — a Super Bowl record — with two touchdowns. Smith, a largely unheralded rookie, broke the game's rushing record with 204 yards and also scored two touchdowns.

No first-year player had previously gained over 100 yards in a Super Bowl.

Elway, the focus of most of the pre-game press attention, opened on a stunning note. On Denver's first play, he launched a 56-yard touchdown pass to wide receiver Ricky Nattiel.

But Elway's day turned into a nightmare. Continually harried by Washington's defense, he completed only 14 of 38 passes and was intercepted three times.

His vaunted trio of receivers, the "three amigos," were shut down by the Redskins' defensive backs.

Williams' performance caps a remarkable comeback for a player whose career seemed almost over two years ago.

The former Tampa Bay Buccaneer only won the Redskins' starting quarterback job in the final regular season game before the playoffs. In the two playoff games, Washington scored only 38 points.

For the fifth straight year, the Super Bowl turned out to be a somewhat anti-climactic, one-sided affair.

The Redskins' last win in 1983 was relatively close — 27-21 over Miami. The following year they lost to the Los Angeles Raiders 38-9. Both the Redskins' Super Bowl victories have come in strike-marred seasons.

And it was an eerie reprise for the Broncos, whose coach, Dan Reeves, said they were haunted by their 39-20 loss to the New York Giants in 1987, a contest in which they led at halftime then were outgained 200-2 over the next 20 minutes.

If that was a haunting, this one was a possession.

Consider this:

— Williams was playing less than 24 hours after root canal on a molar, and set a Super Bowl record with 340 yards on 18-of-29 passing, 306 in the first half. Only six other quarterbacks have passed for 300 yards in a full Super Bowl. The four TD passes by the first black quarterback to play in this ultimate game tied the record for a Super Bowl.

— The 35 second-quarter points — on just 18 plays — were 14 more than the Super Bowl record for a quarter and the most in a single period in National Football League (NFL) playoff his-

Fifty-three seconds into the second quarter, Williams threw an 80-yard touchdown pass to Sanders. Less than four minutes later, it was a 27-yarder to Gary Clark, followed by a 58-yard TD run by Smith, his first pro touchdown; a 50-yarder to Sanders and an eight-yarder to Clint Didier.

It hardly looked like that at the start.

Beginning with the 56-yard touchdown pass from Elway to Nattiel on their first play from scrimmage, the Broncos befuddled the Redskins in the first quarter with just about everything in their diverse playbook.

While Washington was starting its first five possessions at its own 20 or worse and open receivers were dropping passes, Denver was moving up and down the field.

There was a halfback pass to Elway, a quarterback draw, shovel passes and runs when Washington was looking for the pass.

But the Broncos couldn't finish off what they started.

Their second drive stalled at the Washington 7 and resulted in a field goal; their third was thwarted when Alvin Walton dropped Elway for an 18-yard loss, pushing the Broncos out of field goal range.

After Washington went 1-2-3-punt on its first series, Elway went boom — and it was 7-0 Broncos just 1:57 into the game.

It was the simplest of patterns — Nattiel on a fly, streaking right by Barry Wilburn, who later had two interceptions. Nattiel caught the ball in stride at the 7 and fell over the goal line as Wilburn tackled him too late.

Celebrating Redskins fans romp through Washington

WASHINGTON (AP) — Hundreds of thousands of Washington Redskins fans poured into the streets of the U.S. capital for a raucous, sometimes violent, celebration Sunday night of the team's 42-10 Super Bowl win over the Denver Broncos.

A police spokesman, who asked not to be identified, said an undetermined number of arrests were made because of incidents of looting, window breaking at area shops and fights between celebrants.

No official arrests estimates were available because of the large number of people in the area, he said.

However, earlier in the evening at least four youths were arrested in an apparent racial incident in which four white teenagers jumped a black youth and stole his leather coat.

Police said the four likely would be charged with robbery.

Several other celebrants were detained by police for public drunkenness. No formal charges have been brought against them.

At the White House, President Ronald Reagan and his wife, Nancy, gathered with about 40 personal friends in the family theatre to watch the game, said Liz Murphy, a White House spokeswoman.

Fans poured out of the local bars, townhouses and college fraternities of Georgetown, a Washington neighbourhood, to mass on street corners and wave Redskins banners. With "we're No. 1" fingers raised high, they sang "Hail to the Redskins" and sent up cheers from atop light poles for television cameras.

An extra contingent of police officers wearing riot gear blocked off sections of the area to vehicles, but allowed clamouring fans, estimated at 100,000 to turn the neighbourhood into a giant block party.

Jubilation turns to chagrin for Denver Broncos fans

DENVER (AP) — Jubilation lasted a mere 15 minutes in bars and living rooms in this football-crazed town Sunday night as Denver's beloved Broncos blew an early 10-0 lead and fell 42-10 to the Washington Redskins in the Super Bowl.

"It was a wake. It was very tragic," said Charlie Biederman, whose two dozen guests watched the game on his big-screen television. "The feeling here was 'wait until the year after next.'"

In anticipation of a Super Bowl victory, the city was awash in the Broncos' orange and blue during the past two weeks. Pep rallies were held daily. Instead, Sunday proved to be the day Denver went 0-3 in the Super Bowl.

"We started to lose our enthusiasm at halftime," said Michele Kidney, a cocktail waitress at Bay Wolf Restaurant, site of a black-tie party of 100. "We remained hopeful in the second half, but in our hearts we knew what would happen."

In a nightmarish second quarter, Washington went ahead 35-10, and the shell-shocked Broncos never recovered.

The game evoked a sense of deja vu among Denver fans. Last year in the Super Bowl, Denver was ahead of the New York Giants 10-9 at halftime but lost 39-20.

At Denver's Prudential Plaza, where a giant TV screen had been erected, hundreds gathered to watch the game in light snow. By the third quarter, the crowd had dwindled to fewer than 50. Supermarkets experienced the opposite effect.

"It was dead in the first half," a supermarket clerk said during the second half, "but it's picked up. We have customers, although it's a little thinner than usual."

At Jackson's Hole, a sports bar in suburban Lakewood owned by former Broncos tight end Ron Eloff, the cheering of fans in the standing-room-only bar drowned out the 33 TV-sets in the first period, when Denver was ahead.

EconomyParliamentarians propose new tax to help Palestinian revolt

AMMAN (J.T.) — A recent proposal by ten parliamentarians to draft a tax legislation to support the Palestinian uprising in the occupied territories has drawn mixed reactions as to the viability of such a move.

The deputies of the Lower House of Parliament have presented a signed petition to the House asking it to consider drafting a bill to be called "tax for the support of the uprising in the occupied territories."

In their petition, the deputies who represent constituencies in East and West Banks of Jordan said the tax was needed to maintain the momentum and secure sustainability to the ongoing uprising in the West Bank and Gaza Strip.

Commenting on the deputies' suggestion, industrialist Fuad Habash said he favoured any sort of assistance to support the steadfastness of the Palestinian people under occupation. "They must be living in a dire economic situation having been engaged in the uprising for the past 50 days," Habash told the Jordan Times in a telephone interview.

He noted that the channels of support were not important "so long as the aid finds its way to our brothers under occupation." Whatever assistance we donate will remain little compared to the sacrifices undertaken by the Palestinians in the occupied territories, Habash added.

A Jordanian scholar criticised the projected draft saying that the "funds are unlikely to reach the hands of the needed people." Such a move would only "pacify the ongoing uprising," said the scholar who declined to be quoted by name.

He said "it is a step long overdue since Palestinians elsewhere have been paying a similar tax."

Economist Riad Khouri said, in general, he was in favour of the tax provided the people can afford to pay it willingly. Khouri noted that Third World countries impose various taxes and financial regulations which are either ignored, evaded or partially implemented. This, he added, causes problems for both governments and citizens.

Another economist said he favoured political support for the uprising through official channels rather than levying an extra tax on families who may not be able to pay it.

Jordanians, EC officials hold talks on development, cooperation

AMMAN (J.T.) — Minister of State for Prime Minister Affairs and Acting Planning Minister Fayed Al Tarawneh, met Monday with representatives from the European Commission and the European Investment Bank who are currently visiting Jordan.

Tarawneh discussed with the representatives financial policies adopted by the Jordanian government to develop and support Arab and regional cooperation. He also outlined the importance of aid received from the European Community in the form of three financial protocols for development cooperation projects.

Tarawneh stressed the importance of cooperation between the European Community and Jordan especially in the form of transferring technological know-how and joint regional projects.

The representatives also held talks with Water and Irrigation Minister Ahmad Dakhaqan. During the meeting, an agreement was reached between European Investment Bank and the ministry on funding a feasibility study on dams in Al Mousa Basin.

Agreement was also reached on funding sewage projects and artesian wells in Zarqa and Azraq areas respectively. The funding includes designs and other necessary documentation.

Another accord was also reached on conducting a feasibility study for developing and improving the East Ghor Canal to conserve water.

The representatives arrived here Sunday for a five-day visit.

The two sides are expected to conclude their discussions Thursday.

FORECAST FOR TUESDAY, FEBRUARY 2, 1988

YOUR DAILY HOROSCOPE

From the Carol Fisher Institute

GENERAL TENDENCIES: If you have occasion to investigate your financial matters, be extremely thorough and watch out for costly errors. Your creative abilities are particularly keen at this time, so direct them at worthwhile goals.

ARIES (Mar. 21 to Apr. 19) Be certain you have an important project to the latter before considering any new projects. Avoid any overly critical person.

TAURUS (Apr. 20 to May 20) Your business partner may be rather difficult this morning, but don't let that spoil your mood. Entertain some guests tonight.

GEMINI (May 21 to June 21)

Don't allow a disagreeable co-worker to get you downer up. Stay around those people who maintain up beat attitudes and good wardrobes would be wise.

VIRGO (Aug. 22 to Sept. 22) Instead of just daydreaming your spare time away, work on improving your efficiency. Avoid the temptation to argue with your mate.

LIBRA (Sept. 23 to Oct. 22) Revise your budget, cutting out all unnecessary expenses. Get out and socialise tonight. You're likely to make some valuable contacts.

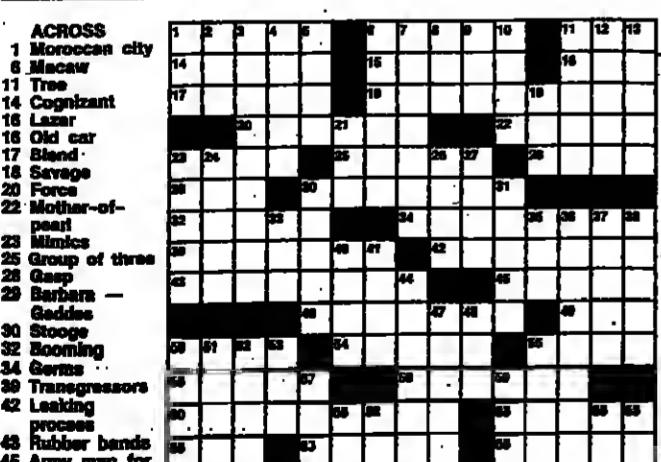

SCORPIO (Oct. 23 to Nov. 21) You may be a hit too fixed in your views, so try to keep an open mind for a change and listen to what others have to say objectively.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22 to Dec. 21) Some trustworthy friends can help you make big progress very quickly, so be sure to ask politely for help if you need it.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22 to Jan. 20) Steer clear of a friend who tends to be too demanding and sometimes gets on your nerves. Don't neglect any important business matters.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 21 to Feb. 19) You'll have a considerable amount of luck today at being in the right place at the right time, so keep your eyes open for opportunities.

PISCES (Feb. 20 to Mar. 20) Your fellow workers can be very helpful today, but someone you don't know too well could give you bad advice. Consider new ideas carefully.

Dollar, shares rise sharply

LONDON (R) — The dollar rose sharply in European trading Monday, touching its highest levels since mid-November on a lead set in Tokyo a few hours earlier.

The U.S. currency was boosted by anticipation of strong demand for $27 billion worth of U.S. Treasury bonds being auctioned this week in Washington's quarterly refunding exercise and speculation about new interest rate cuts, dealers said.

It opened in London at 1,6928 Deutsche marks and 129.47 Japanese yen after closing in Tokyo at 1,6873 marks and 129 yen. It had ended in London on Friday at 1,6765 marks and 127.70 yen.

"The dollar has got off to a fairly good start. It looks as if we are going to test 1.70 (marks)," the chief dealer of a large U.S. bank in Frankfurt said.

Britain's pound sterling weakened in the face of the dollar's strength to open at $1.7505 — almost two cents on Friday. Gold also fell, beginning the day at $453.05 an ounce in London after closing on Friday at $456.00.

In addition to the anticipation about the treasury bond auction in Washington and the prospect of lower interest rates, the dollar also took strength from weekend comments at an international symposium in Davos, Switzerland, by U.S. Trade Representative Clayton Yeutter.

He said he thought foreign exchange rates were now at the right level to make American companies competitive in overseas markets. The dollar has fallen by around 50 per cent against the mark and the yen since a recent peak three years ago.

Share values opened firmer in London with the Financial Times Stock Exchange index of 100 leading shares up 6.5 points.

Leading West German shares also rose in early pre-bourse trading on the stronger dollar and Wall Street gains last week, but then slipped back amid continuing concern about the domestic economy, dealers said.

Self healthier, sobered after the excess enthusiasm of 1987, which saw stock markets soar before their resounding October crash, on their way to what was the longest period of sustained growth since World War II.

World economic chiefs stress time factor as key to correct global trade turmoil

DAVOS, Switzerland (R) — Economic policy-makers say the world will escape a recession and may be healthier after the turmoil on share and currency markets, but they are having a hard time convincing businessmen, or even all of their colleagues.

"In informal meetings here, I heard a lot of pessimism," David Mulford, assistant secretary of the U.S. Treasury, said of the Davos world economic forum, which began on Thursday and ends next Saturday. "But policies are moving in the right direction."

"We are in a delicate process of confidence building," he added. "There is no substitute for patience, time and developing policies options that are acceptable and politically possible in our countries."

Senior officials from the United States, Japan and West Germany — the three biggest industrial powerhouses — all pleaded for time. Curing massive imbalances in their trade and payments was not an easy task, they said.

Officials of the major industrial democracies paint a picture, despite the recent upheavals on financial markets, of a global economy that will manage to escape a recession.

The world might even find it modest recession, coming on the heels of a stock market crash, could start to feed on itself and send the world into a downward spiral.

Even a modest recession could aggravate the Third World debt crisis, and that in turn could present renewed dangers to the world banking system.

This is also an election year in the United States, and no one here expects the Reagan administration to muster the willpower for new policy initiatives, though that is one of the things the world needs most.

A year ago, finance ministers from six major industrial power had agreed in Paris that it was time the dollar's 2½-year slide ended. Their agreement, dubbed the Louvre Accord, managed to keep the dollar virtually unchanged for eight months.

But that time was not without its pressures. According to private estimates, confirmed indirectly by a leading central banker, monetary authorities bought nearly $120 billion during that time to keep the dollar steady.

That meant central banks had to finance about three-quarters of the United States current account deficit — the shortfall in trade of goods and services and in financial transfers — because private financial markets were unwilling to do so. Central bankers say there were limits to the amount of unwanted dollars they could absorb. They could intervene massively again this year, but then the game is over. The U.S. however is expected to run a current account deficit for at least several more years.

In the speeches here, Mulford, Japan's vice-minister of finance, Toyoo Gyohten, and Helmut Schlesinger, vice-president of the West German Bundesbank, each emphasised that adjustment of policies in each of their countries will take time.

They argued that policy coordination was working, gradually, to cure the ills of the world economy. But one participant at the Davos meeting, speaking privately, was not so sure. The time bought last year with central bank intervention after the Louvre Accord has been wasted, he said. The result was the stock market crash.

And this year leadership was lacking, especially from a lame-duck Reagan administration and a coalition in Bonn weakened by a political scandal in the state of Schleswig-Holstein.

"I'm not really all that pessimistic," he said. "But after saying that, I'm not so sure anymore."

Hong Kong takes lead as busiest container port

HONG KONG (R) — Hong Kong has overtaken Rotterdam as the world's busiest container port, marine department director Gerry Higginson said Monday.

He told a press conference the port had recorded a 24.63 per cent increase in container traffic in 1987, while officials in Rotterdam anticipated no increase for their port.

Higginson said total container traffic for last year reached 3.46 million 20-foot equivalent units (TEUs), compared with 2.77 million in 1986. TEUs are the units by which container trade is calculated worldwide.

About 2.8 million TEUs were expected to be handled by Rotterdam last year.

"This quite clearly puts Hong Kong as the world's busiest container port," he said.

Higginson admitted Hong Kong's facilities were being stretched to the limit, with 22.56 per cent of the traffic being off-loaded into lighters in mid-stream.

"Hong Kong's container terminals are working 15 to 16 per cent over capacity, he said.

Some ships had to wait up to 90 hours to unload, an unusually long time in the rapid world of containerised transport.

London finance community faces further job losses

LONDON (R) — Thousands more jobs may be axed in London's finance centre following the October stock market crash, a stock exchange official said Monday.

Rhiannon Chapman, head of personnel at the exchange, told Personnel magazine that as many as 10,000 of the 90,000 people who work in the securities industry could lose their jobs this year.

"Many redundancies will arise because competition for business is now becoming extremely fierce, and profits margins are shrinking," she said.

Those who remain can expect greater pressures "with increased emphasis on fast reaction time, performance and productivity," she said.

Chapman said this was a "worst case" scenario for employment prospects. She added that people losing jobs would probably be clerks and junior executives rather than dealers.

She said 10,000 jobs had been created in London's finance centre over the past five years. Many of the jobs that will be lost represent excess capacity caused by mergers during the 1986 "Big Bang" deregulation of the exchange.

Indian troops seize 134 Tamil rebels in Jaffna

COLOMBO (R) — Indian troops detained 134 Tamil separatist guerrillas in a massive weekend operation on Sri Lanka's northern Jaffna peninsula, security sources said Monday.

They said 93 fighters of the Liberation Tigers of Tamil Eelam rebel group were captured in the sweep across the Vadamarachchi region and 41 of their comrades surrendered.

The sources said a large quantity of weapons and ammunition was seized from rebel hideouts in the operation.

The independent Sun newspaper reported Monday that Tiger leader Velupillai Prabhakaran was hiding in the Vadamarachchi area with 100 bodyguards and that the Indian troops were closing in on them. There was no official confirmation of the report.

Residents said the eastern towns of Batticaloa, Kalmunai and Samanturai, were paralysed Monday after another rebel group, the Eelam Revolutionary Organisation of Students, called a strike to protest against the arrest of four of their leaders.

The four men, suspected of having been involved in a series of bomb attacks in Colombo over the past three years, were arrested during the past two weeks, security sources said.

Residents said the student group complained that its members should not be arrested as it supported the Indo-Sri Lanka peace accord.

President Junius Jayewardene said Sunday he planned to hold elections to proposed provincial councils throughout the island in March or April as part of a campaign to end the Tamil rebellion in the north and a Sinhalese insurgency in the south.

The setting up of semi-autonomous councils in the island's nine provinces is a key element in an agreement signed by Jayewardene and Indian Prime Minister Rajiv Gandhi last July to restore peace in the country.

Jayewardene said Gandhi and other Indian leaders, with whom he held talks in New Delhi last week, were confident that the Indian peace-keeping force deployed on the island would be able to restore normality in the strife-torn north and east by March or April.

At least 50,000 Indian troops have been posted in the two regions under the pact to disarm the Tigers who are fighting to set up an independent state for the Tamil minority.

Jayewardene called on the Sinhalese youth opposed to the pact to surrender their weapons and contest elections to the proposed provincial councils.

He said a large measure of central-government powers would be given to the councils with each having a governor, a chief minister and a board of ministers.

Twelve Sri Lankan soldiers were wounded Monday in the eastern district of Trincomalee in a third explosion triggered by Tamil rebels in as many days, a military official said.

Two of the soldiers were in critical condition and were rushed to the capital at Colombo for treatment, said the official, who cannot be identified under briefing rules.

Former Soviet premier Malenkov dies

MOSCOW (R) — Georgy Malenkov, who briefly served as Soviet prime minister after the death of Josef Stalin in 1953, had died aged 86, an official spokesman said Monday.

The spokesman, Gennady Gerasimov of the Foreign Ministry's Information Directorate, told Reuters that Malenkov's death — about 10 days ago — had not been announced earlier at the request of his relatives.

Gerasimov said Malenkov, who was expelled from the top leadership in 1957 accused of plotting against the Communist Party by Nikita Khrushchev, had been buried in a Moscow cemetery.

During Stalin's last years Malenkov — described in the great Soviet encyclopedia of the time as a "true disciple" of the dictator — appeared best placed to become his successor as Kremlin number one.

Malenkov promised to focus more on providing consumer goods and improving the performance of agriculture.

During the first months of his rule, he and Khrushchev combined to remove Lavrenty Beria, Stalin's one-time police chief, from the party's ruling presidium, now called the politburo.

Beria was executed as an enemy of the people and a foreign spy.

Barge carrying heavy oil sinks off U.S. coast

ANACORTES, Washington (AP) — A barge carrying 283,500 gallons (1.07 million litres) of heavy oil sank four miles (6.4 kilometres) offshore and began leaking Sunday, the Coast Guard said.

The barge, its cargo in 12 sealed compartments, began listing unexplainably in calm seas as it was being towed by a tugboat and went down in 136 feet (41 metres) of water, said coast guard spokesman Roy Compton. No one was injured.

Murky water and strong currents initially prevented divers from determining the extent of the leak. A team with more sophisticated equipment later went down, but there was no sign the oil had washed ashore or created a slick officials said.

"As long as there is a barge sunk out there with 9,000 barrels of oil product, there is the potential for a major problem," Compton said.

Coast Guard seaman Veronica Cady said divers from the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration could get no deeper than 80 feet (24 metres) late Sunday afternoon.

ANSWERS TO WEEKLY BRIDGE QUIZ

Q.1—East-West vulnerable, as South West you hold:

♦K7♦ ♦A♦ ♦K1065 ♦A♦87632
The bidding has proceeded.

North East South West

A ♦ Pass ♦ Pass

What action do you take?

A—It seems highly likely that your opponents can make a slam, possibly a grand slam. Therefore, it is essential that you make it as difficult as possible for them to realize the full potential of their combined assets by making an advance sacrifice. Our vote goes to five diamonds, or even six diamonds.

Q.2—South vulnerable, as South you hold:

♦A92 ♦AK8 ♦83 ♦Q10932
The bidding has proceeded:

North West North East

Pass Pass 1 ♦ Pass

2 ♦ Pass 2 ♦ Pass

What do you bid now?

A—You have excellent support for partner's first-bid suit. Nevertheless, you should be quite content with a more preference to two hearts. You already took the ace-king of hearts into account when you made your two-over-one response.

Q.3—Neither vulnerable, as South you hold:

♦AK772 ♦AK3 ♦6 ♦Q19

The bidding has proceeded:

South West North East

What do you bid now?

A—You are definitely in the slam zone, but you don't know in what strain. For the moment, you need no more than bid three hearts. If partner has four cards in that suit, he will raise; if he does not but has three-card support for spades, he will take a spade preference; otherwise, he will rebid three no trump.

In any event, you will then have a clearer picture of your final destination.

Q.3—As South, vulnerable, you hold:

♦Q73 ♦A2 ♦AQ1085 ♦A6

The bidding has proceeded:

South West North East

1 ♦ Pass 1 ♦ Pass

2 NT Pass 3 ♦ Pass

What action do you take?

A—Opposite a partner who has shown an unbalanced hand with at least a six-card spade suit, your hand is worth far more than its face value. The ruffing value in hearts, three trumps to a high honor and wealth of prime cards are assets that partner could not possibly imagine were you simply to raise to four spades. To get across the message that you really like spades, cut-hid four clubs and leave it to partner.

Q.6—Both vulnerable, as South you hold:

♦Q1087 ♦Q173 ♦A82

The bidding has proceeded:

North East South West

1 ♦ Pass t ♦ Pass

2 ♦ Pass ?

What action do you take?

A—Since partner's bid is forcing, pass is not of the question. Your possible bids are two no trump or three clubs. With such a weak hand and all soft values, we don't think you should encourage partner at all, so a bid of two no trump is clearly superior to a preference to partner's first-bid suit.

Social Democrat takes lead in Ecuador elections

QUITO (R) — Social Democrat Rodrigo Borja took a big lead in Ecuador's presidential elections Sunday in his third campaign for his country's highest office, according to poll results and a television forecast.

The computer network of Channel 10 national television gave Borja, a 52-year-old law professor who leads the Democratic Left Party, 20.4 per cent of the vote with more than half of the five million ballots counted.

Borja, who called on Friday for renegotiation of Ecuador's $9.22 billion foreign debt, appeared headed for a run-off election between the two top candidates next May.

The voters chose from 10 presidential candidates Sunday and a run-off election will be held on May 8 if no single candidate wins 50 per cent of the vote.

Seven hours after the polls closed, Abdala Bucaram, an ex-mayor who returned from exile to run for president, lay second with 15.3 per cent and conservative Sixto Duran of the ruling Social Christian Party was third with 12.8 per cent.

Frank Vargas Pazzos, a former air-force general who staged two sensational but unsuccessful rebellions against retiring President Leon Febres Cordero in 1986, looked out of the running with 11 per cent, Channel 10 said.

In the 1984 election, Borja lost to Febres Cordero in a run-off.

Final results may not be known for weeks as ballots are sent from the nation's 20 provinces to the capital for counting.

Ecuador, one of Latin America's poorest nations, suffered an economic crisis last year but analysts say Ecuadoreans doubt a new president will make rapid changes.

Two people were killed and several others wounded in a shootout during voting in Quito, Interior Minister Heinz Moeller told a news conference Sunday. In the last election in 1984, at least 10 people were killed in clashes between political groups.

Moeller told reporters the clash in the capital occurred when a group involved in a land dispute tried to keep rivals from voting.

Top Iowa paper supports nomination of Dole, Simon

DES MOINES, Iowa (R) — A week before a key presidential vote in Iowa, the state's top newspaper said it cannot back Vice President George Bush for the Republican presidential nomination because of the Iran-contra scandal.

In a concrete sign that the scandal could negatively affect Bush, the Des Moines Register said Sunday it was backing Senate minority leader Robert Dole for the Republican nomination in large part because of reservations about the vice president's role in the secret U.S. arms sales to Iran.

The newspaper also said it was supporting Paul Simon for the Democratic presidential nomination, comparing the affable Illinois senator to one of the most beloved American leaders, Abraham Lincoln.

Although Bush has repeatedly said he has clarified his role in the Iran-contra affair — the worst scandal to rock the Reagan administration — the Register's endorsement editorial insisted the vice president has not done so.

"George Bush is a decent man of presidential calibre," the newspaper said, "but there are too many unanswered questions ab-

Manila police clash with rioters

MANILA, Philippines (AP) — Troops fired tear gas before dawn Monday to disperse about 1,000 people who stormed a suburban town hall to protest alleged election fraud.

The military action came as voters in four provinces chose local officials in balloting that had been delayed by fears of violence.

The military's capital regional command said at least three people were injured in the melee, which erupted when supporters of losing candidates stormed the town hall in Muntinlupa, where votes were being counted following the Jan. 18 regional elections.

Witnesses said the crowd smashed windows, overturned tables and tried to tear down the election tally board. Troops hurled tear gas canisters and fired fixed bayonets in the air to scatter the protesters.

Former Mayor Santiago Carlos Jr., who was training administration candidate Ignacio Bunye in the mayoral contest, was among those slightly injured.

Crowds gathered again around mid-day near the town hall, but there were no serious incidents.

Voters went to the polls Monday in the central provinces of Leyte and Northern Samar and in the Mindanao Island provinces of Lanao Del Norte and Lanao Del Sur to choose governors, vice governors, mayors and council members.

Lt.-Col. Buddy Limsiaco said voting was generally peaceful in the Lanao provinces, although the turnout in many areas was light.

He said troops arrested several people for election violations, including possession of fraudulent ballots.

He also said voting was delayed in some communities because of a lack of ballot and ballot boxes.

Military spokesmen said there were no reports of violence during the nine hours of balloting.

Col. Antonio Nale told reporters at least six combat battalions, with about 2,000 soldiers, were sent to the two Lanao provinces to provide additional security during Monday's voting.

Both Communist and Muslim rebels operate in the two Lanao provinces, among the most lawless areas of the country. Communist rebels also operate in Leyte and Northern Samar.

Document incriminating Waldheim 'disappears'

VIENNA, Austria (AP) — Austrian President Kurt Waldheim was quoted as saying Monday that he does not feel incriminated by a published telegram claiming he was involved in the deportation of civilian prisoners in Yugoslavia in World War II.

His spokesman Gerold Christian branded the document a fake as soon as it was telecast to news agencies Friday evening by the West German magazine Der Spiegel.

A member of the commission investigating Waldheim's controversial wartime record said meanwhile that efforts to locate the original of the published telegram in Yugoslavia had failed.

Manfred Messerschmidt of West Germany told the Associated Press that members of the West German embassy in Belgrade had asked the heads of archives in the Croatian capital of Zagreb and in Belgrade if they had the original document.

The document was not in either archive, Messerschmidt said.

"Nobody knows where it is," he added. "The document has disappeared ... the whole thing is unclear."

He said efforts to reach Dusan Plenica, the Yugoslav historian said to have given the telegram to the West German news magazine Der Spiegel, had also failed.

The Associated Press in Belgrade also could not reach Plenica.

According to Der Spiegel, the telegram was found by Plenica, who told the Associated Press Sunday he has several documents by a published telegram claiming he "seriously implicate" Waldheim in Nazi atrocities.

Plenica has repeatedly made such allegations, but had never produced any evidence for his charges against Waldheim.

Waldheim has been surrounded by controversy since March 1986, when Austrian and U.S. media and the World Jewish Congress first disclosed he served in the Balkans as a German army lieutenant from 1942 to 1945.

He belatedly admitted his Balkans service, but has consistently denied any links to or knowledge of atrocities in the Balkans.

Der Spiegel reported that Waldheim said Sunday evening that a whole series of indicators pointed to the telegram being a fake.

Waldheim was quoted as saying the publication of the telegram was an attempt "to unsettle the commission and the public in the final round."

Actress to help anti-alcohol campaign

MOSCOW (R) — American comedy actress Carol Burnett is to visit the Soviet Union and address television viewers on ways of combating alcoholism and drug addiction, one of her tour organisers has said.

J.W. Canty, an alcohol counsellor and priest in the U.S. Episcopal Church, told reporters Burnett had agreed to describe her own experience of growing up with alcoholic parents in order to help a joint U.S.-Soviet campaign against alcohol and drug abuse.

Burnett would appear with her 23-year-old actress daughter Carrie Hamilton, who became a drug addict at the age of 13 but for the past six years has lived without narcotics or alcohol, he added.

Canty heads an organisation called the "Soviet-U.S. Joint Conference on Alcoholism and Drug Abuse," bringing together concerned private citizens and health officials from both countries in the fight against alcohol and drug dependence.
